ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, JANUARY 8, 1887.

General Intelligence.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 17th December; from Allahabad and Madras to the 15th December; and from Calcutta to the 14th December.

THE Viceroy's tour has been brought to a termination. His Excellency arrived at Pondicherry on the 10th inst., and met with a cordial reception from the local authorities.

ON the following morning Lord Dufferin left for Madras, and, after a few hours' stay at that city, his Excellency, who was accompanied from this point by the Countess of Dufferin and his four younger children, who had just arrived from England, left for Calcutta in I.M.S. Olive.

THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT has taken over the command of the Bombay Army.

IT is understood that among the questions discussed during the recent visit of the Viceroy to Hyderabad, was that of the reduction at an early date of the number of the Nizam's Irregular troops, but it has not yet transpired what decision was arrived at.

THE question of the salaries of the subordinates on the State railways is under consideration. The heads of the State railways have been asked for opinion as to the desirability of abolishing the present system of incremental salaries, and introducing a system by which the employes could be paid at their actual market value.

THE nine sales of Bengal opium which have already taken place have resulted in a deficit of Rs. 25,89,790 as compared with the estimate. On the other hand, the proceeds of eight months' pass duty on opium exported from Bombay are Rs. 24,65,800 better than the estimate.

AT the preliminary meeting in the Town Hall, Calcutta, to consider the question of celebrating the Queen's Jubilee, it was practically decided to hold the celebration during the cold season, pending the Viceroy's approval.

IT is proposed to set up a stone block in the Residency grounds at Lucknow, inscribed with details of the garrison force during the Mutiny. Sir Alfred Lyall, General Dillon, and several officials went over the ground a few days ago, and selected a position for the proposed memorial.

THE Bank of Bengal has raised its rate on demand loans on Government Paper to 5 per cent.

THE Bank of Bombay raised its rate of interest on demand loans on Government Paper to 6 per cent.

THE Sanitary Board has pronounced Calcutta to be free from cholera.

THERE is more boycotting than business being done in the City of Delhi at present, we hear, as a consequence of the recent quarrel between the rival sects, three of the largest Mahomedan merchants having been reduced to considerable straits by the defection of their best customers, the Hindus. This is Western civilisation as imported from Ireland.

IT is understood that Captain Peacocke, R.E., is engaged in preparing a complete report with sketches of his experiences with the Afghan Boundary Commission. No member of the Commission saw more or is likely to turn what he saw to better account.

THE Bengal and North-Western Railway Company are about opening two branches, one of 33 miles, to Nepalgunge, a market town close to the Nepal frontier, and the other 40 miles long, running north from Goruckpore. A modest ceremonial will mark the occasion of the Nepalgunge opening on the 17th, at which Colonel Forbes, Commissioner of Fyzabad, will preside.

MR. ALEXANDER WILSON, of the firm of Messrs. Jardine, Skinner and Company, has been appointed Sheriff of Calcutta for the coming year.

BRIGADIER-GENERAL H. C. WILKINSON has arrived in Allahabad, and assumed command of the Allahabad Division.

THE news from Upper Burma this week indicates that the active operations taken against the "dacoits" are producing a tranquillising effect. Numbers of Burmese are laying down their arms, and in many parts the country is being rapidly pacified.

SEVERAL engagements have taken place during the week, the principal being near Pokoko on Sunday, when the enemy were surprised by Colonel Gatacre's column, and many of their number slaughtered.

THERE was an extraordinary fall of rain at Ahmednugger on the 11th inst., no less than seven inches being gauged in twelve hours. The country was flooded for a time, and several lives are reported to have been lost.

SENHOR AUGUSTO C. C. DE CARVALHO, the new Governor-General of the Portuguese possessions in India, arrived in Bombay from Europe by the last mail, and left immediately for Goa.

THE Gwalior State has decided upon the immediate construction of several most important metalled roads to act as direct feeders to railways, and open out grain districts.

THE Public Service Commission met on the 15th inst., in the Lawrence Hall, Lahore, Sir Charles Aitchison presiding. The Hon. Colonel W. G. Davies was the first witness examined.

THE last Burma Government Gazette notifies under the Upper Burma Laws Act the division of the country—exclusive of the Shan States—into four Commissioner-ships.

OBITUARY.—Raja Harendra Krishna, of Calcutta.

THE ITALIAN ASIATIC SOCIETY.—Italy has at last got her Asiatic Society, thanks chiefly to the indefatigable Count Angelo de Gubernatis. Hitherto there were but five Asiatic societies—the Société Asiatique in Paris; the Asiatic Society of Bengal, with branches at Bombay and Madras; the Royal Asiatic Society in London; the Deutsche Morgenländische Gesellschaft; and the American Oriental Society. Now Italy, which has lately produced a number of excellent Oriental scholars, follows, and we shall soon hope to see the volumes of the Journal of the Società Italiana Asiatica taking their place by the side of the long rows of children of her elder sisters. In starting the Italian Asiatic Society has chosen the eminent Arabic scholar Amari as its honorary president, and it has secured the names of the best Italian Orientalists among its honorary members. It has also conferred honorary membership on twenty-four foreign Oriental scholars, twelve belonging to Europe and America, twelve to the East. Among the latter we find the high priest of the Parsis at Bombay, Dastur Giamaspi Minoccherg; the high priest of the Buddhists in Ceylon, Sumangala; the Mechitarist Leonce Alishan, Venice; and several Native Sanskrit scholars, such as Bhandarkar of Pune, Bhagvanlal Indragi of Bombay, and Rajendralal Mitra, President of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, at Calcutta. The European honorary members are nearly the same as those whose names appear on the rolls of honour of the other Asiatic societies. The Société Asiatique is the only one that seems to have no honorary members. Looking at the latest list of honorary members of the other Oriental societies, we find three names on all, Boettlingk, Max Müller, and Roth (America, Bengal, Deutsche, M.G., London); four names on three, Fleischer (A., D., L.), Renan (A., B., L.), Weber (A., B., L.), Whitney (B., D., L.); one name on two, Sir H. Rawlinson (B., D.). The Italian Society has added to these four new names, Maspero, Legge, Brugsch, and Friedrich Müller of Vienna, every one of them already well known to fame in the West and in the East.—Athenæum.

Notes of the Week.

If the story of the Tibet mission as told in the Times last week be the true one, there can be little doubt of the Indian Government and the India Office having been humbugged by the Chinese Resident at Lhasa into countermanding Mr. Macaulay's advance. The Resident, Sâ-Ampa, or the eating Ampa, as called by the Tibetans, or Sâ-Wampa, the "filthy one," as called by the Chinese, and whose venality is said to be a byword amongst both, did not desire the presence of the mission, and in this view he was supported by the younger and evil-looking monks of the great monasteries of Lhasa, who, holding monopolies, look upon all other traders with enmity. These persons, it would appear, succeeded in frightening the Indian authorities into abandoning the mission, although the Chinese Government cordially approved of it, and all the respectable Tibetan authorities at Lhasa were ready to welcome it. "A new and fruitful field for British commerce seemed within our reach," writes the correspondent who has communicated the details to the Times, "when suddenly the home authorities peremptorily ordered the mission to return—a serious blunder, which already threatens disastrous consequences."

Those consequences are pointed out. "Not only will the frontier trade with India be hopelessly stopped, but the Nepaulese and Bhootanese will give trouble. Why should not the mission now be sent to Lhasa? It would be easy to convince the Chinese that they have been hoodwinked by Sâ, and that it is to their interest and prestige that they should insist upon their orders (which were in favour of the reception of the mission) being respected. But if this is not considered desirable we should, at any rate, insist on the Chinese Resident and the Tibet Government coming down to Gyantse to meet a British envoy and arrange for complete freedom and protection for our traders so far, at any rate, on the road to Lhasa."

It is, however, a very simple matter to recommend this action, but it will not be so simple a matter to carry it out. To convince the Chinese Government that it has been hoodwinked by one of its subordinates may or may not be an easy task, but to get the Chinese Government, when convinced, to act upon the conviction, will not be so easy. If another statement of the same correspondent be correct, to the effect that there are large Chinese firms in Calcutta who would undertake to divert and quadruple all the trade with Tibet which now goes through Nepal, the project of reforming the mission may again be considered. But these assurances are at present only surmises, and there are sceptics who doubt the pleasant prophecies of the opening up of profitable trade by means of the mission.

SOME little time ago there was a complaint as to the neglect shown by the Government of India to the Volunteer Force in that country. The complaint, however, cannot extend to the Government of the Punjab, where the Volunteers have met with honour at the hands of the local authority. The Volunteer officers who were on Sir Charles Aitchison's staff as honorary aides-de-camp during the recent visit to Lahore of the Viceroy and the Duke of Connaught have received a letter from Sir Charles, cordially thanking them for their services, and expressing a hope that the new departure taken in the Punjab of employing Volunteer officers on the personal staff of the Lieutenant-Governor may be the means of securing for Volunteer officers all over India a proper and representative place on all similar occasions.

OUR military contemporary, the Broad Arrow, always taking an intelligent interest in Indian matters, has the following apropos of the interview (reported by telegraph) between Sir Frederick Roberts and the Archbishop and monks of Mandalay on Christmas Day:—

Saul amongst the prophets was not a more interesting figure than Sir Frederick Roberts amongst the Buddhist bishops at Mandalay. The gallant general's fame as a soldier had already reached the monastery there, as the archbishop told him that "his star already glittered with victory." It was not, however, known perhaps that the Commander-in-Chief of India was also a deep theological student versed in the mysteries of Buddhist religion and law. But such would appear to have been the case if the telegram be correct that after the archbishop had expounded to him the beauties of the Buddhist faith and the rules which were laid down therein for the guidance of all in authority, Sir Frederick replied that the course recommended was exactly that which he was following in annexing the country to British rule. Henry of Navarre was not more open to conviction on theological matters, and the General is to be congratulated on so cleverly winning the enemy's priesthood to his side.

BUT honour to whom honour is due. The idea of "getting at" the ecclesiastical dignitaries of Upper Burma was mooted by Lord Dufferin at the beginning of our troubles after the occupation of Mandalay. The difficulty was how to get at them, for Burmese dignitaries are quite different in all respects to other worldly or spiritual dignitaries. Lord Dufferin declared that the Princes of India were for the most part highly civilised, intelligent, and capable persons, but that the Burmese rulers—and the priesthood rule there with as high a hand as in Ireland—belonged to a totally different world—"the order of their ideas being as incomprehensible to us as that of ours to them, while their conception of their own superiority to all created beings rendering diplomatic intercourse between themselves and other nations impossible." The impossibility has now, however, been overcome, and if the Viceroy is to be credited with having first thought of trying, Sir Frederick Roberts must be credited with having succeeded in carrying out, the diplomatic experiment of reconciling to the satisfaction of the spiritual guides of the Burmans the beautiful doctrines of Buddhist patriotism with those of English annexation.

THE news from all parts of India is bright and cheering. Throughout the three Presidencies—in the Punjab, and in the Native States—committees are being held to make arrangements for celebrating the Queen's Jubilee Year with all possible demonstrations of loyalty and goodwill.

THE intelligence from Upper Burma is also satisfactory. Sir Frederick Roberts' diplomacy and military arrangements are showing good results, and a well-considered proclamation, issued under the signatures of the Viceroy, Commander-in-Chief, and the Buddhist Archbishop, promising amnesty to all who will give up dacoity and rebellion, is likely to do more good than the coercive measures which the local English Press of Rangoon has been urging the British authorities to adopt.

BUT there is one little note of discord in the general harmony. The Times correspondent in Upper Burma telegraphs that "intense irritation exists amongst the officers at the disproportionate rewards given for services in Burma as compared with those conferred for the battle of Ginnis. For that small frontier action in Egypt five Distinguished Service Orders were conferred, while only two were given to the entire force in Burma, although the operations here have given peculiar opportunities for junior officers to distinguish themselves. The opinion is loudly and openly expressed that the Indian Army does not receive fair play from the Horse Guards." When did it ever do so?

SOME of the budmashes at Bhopal are unconscious humorists. A few evenings ago they stole Sir Lepel Griffin's dress clothes within ten minutes of the dinner-bell; although his tent was just outside Colonel Ward's compound, with a sentry of the local battalion in front and rear, and a posse of peons and servants about. Perhaps some of these people could throw light on the occurrence if so disposed. Of course the object was not clothes, even Sir Lepel's best, but to blacken the face of the English minister, by seeming to expose the laxity of his administration. Colonel Ward's downright way of dealing with plunderers of all grades has naturally raised him a host of enemies in the State; but it has gained him a powerful friend in the Begum, his employer, and much encouragement elsewhere. Before Colonel Ward joined his new appointment we promised him that Bhopal would prove a hard nut to crack. He has not been disappointed.

LATEST INTELLIGENCE.

(BY TELEGRAPH.)
(Times Correspondents.)
INDIA.

CALCUTTA, JAN. 2.

The meeting of the "National Indian Congress" passed off quietly and without much excitement last week. About 400 delegates are said to have attended, nearly all being Hindoos, with a small intermixture of Parsees and Mahomedans, and some three or four Europeans. As reporters were excluded, the general public derives its knowledge of the proceedings only from communications made to the Press by the managing committee, and from some letters published by individual members. The business commenced on Monday, when the inaugural meeting was held in the town-hall, and Dr. Rajendralala Mitra delivered a speech welcoming the delegates to Calcutta. The Congress then proceeded to elect as its president Dadabhai Naoroji, late Liberal candidate for Holborn. The president's opening speech was remarkable chiefly for its somewhat effusive loyalty of tone. The Congress, he said, had met as a political body, and would not therefore devote its attention to subjects of social reform, which would be handled at the proper time and place. The real business of the Congress commenced on Tuesday. It seems to have sat during the greater part of that day and the two following days, and to have passed a series of resolutions, which were communicated to the Press. The first resolution was one congratulating the Queen on the approach of Her Majesty's jubilee. Then came a group of resolutions dealing with the question of the introduction of representative institutions. In the opinion of the Congress the increasing poverty of vast numbers of the people of India is a subject of grave apprehension, and the creation of representative institutions will prove an important practical step towards the amelioration of their condition. To attain this end it proposes that the Supreme and Provincial Legislatures should be enlarged, that at least one-half of the members should be elected, that not more than one-fourth should be officials, having seats ex officio, and that not more than one-fourth should be nominated by the Government. A series of suggestions was made as to qualifications for the franchise in the different provinces, and it was proposed that the elected members of the Supreme Council should be chosen by the Provincial Councils, and that the Budget and all other measures of public interest should be submitted to the Supreme Council, the members of which body should also have the rights of addressing questions, and of calling for papers from the Government. Certain limited powers of overruling the decisions of the Councils would be reserved to the Executive Government, but subject to appeal to the House of Commons.

It will easily be seen that the effect of these suggestions would be practically to hand over the government of the country to the Hindoos.

The extension of the jury system and the separation of the executive from the judicial functions of the magistracy formed the subjects of another group of resolutions. The question of recruiting the Civil Service seems also to have been discussed, and the opinion was recorded that examinations should be held in both India and England, and that the limit of age should be raised to twenty-three. The subject of Native volunteers then came up, and it was resolved that, in view of the unsettled state of Europe and the immense assistance which the people of India, if duly prepared, could render to England in the event of serious complications, an earnest appeal should be made to the Government to authorise a system of volunteering for Natives. Finally it was resolved that copies of the resolutions should be sent to the Viceroy, with a request that he would forward them to the Secretary of State. The Congress then dispersed, after determining that next year's meeting should be held at Madras.

A terrible catastrophe occurred in Madras on Friday evening. A fair was being held in the People's Park, and a large circle of temporary buildings had been erected for the purpose. Suddenly they took fire at two different places simultaneously. A rush was made towards the entrances, and a block was produced, so that when the fire came round to the entrances many of the people were burnt to death and others were suffocated. The buildings were wooden booths, roofed with leaves, and erected as stalls for the sale of fancy goods. They burnt rapidly, and were entirely consumed before the fire-engines arrived. The police and some Europeans who were present worked with great energy, dragging the Natives from the fire, and trying to allay the panic. It is believed that the number of lives lost must amount to nearly 300, while as many more persons sustained severe injuries. It is said that the Commander-in-Chief and the Prince of Travancore had left the enclosure only a few minutes before the fire broke out. Incendiarism is suspected, as the fire appeared in two places at about the same time; but it is possible that the outbreak on one side of the enclosure was caused by the upsetting of lamps during the panic.

BURMA.

MANDALAY, Dec. 31.

At the recent interview the Buddhist Archbishop and Bishops submitted to General Roberts the draft of a joint proclamation, to be signed by the Commander-in-Chief as representative of the Viceroy and by themselves, which they asked him to have published. The proposed proclamation says:—

"All peoples and races in Upper Burma are now regarded as English people. The Commander-in-Chief will deal with all in a spirit of love and mercy, and will not allow the interests of the Buddhist religion to be molested.

"Power will be given to the Archbishop and Bishops who have received the Royal licence from the King of Burma to regulate the discipline of all monks in the upper and lower provinces according to the rules of their order. These prelates on their part exhort the people, and especially the tsawbwas and petty governors, not to think of resisting within their little territories the British power. If they do, the English soldiers, well armed and irresistible, will surround and occupy them.

"The prelates declare that they have asked the British Government to treat with kindness all who submit, and pledge themselves to use their good offices to secure kind treatment for all who come in, and to ensure that they shall not suffer by their submission."

General Roberts is said to approve of the proposed proclamation, but before issuing it he has sent it to Sir C. Bernard at Rangoon, as chief of the civil authorities. Such a proclamation would be most useful, especially with the Shans, and there ought to be no delay in publishing it. The prerogatives as to Church matters asked for by the Bishops are very much on the lines sketched by the Viceroy when he was here, and require but little modification. The prelates also asked that Kampaw Munghe, an ex-Minister, always devoted to Church interests, should be added to the consultative council of Ministers who advise Sir C. Bernard.

JANUARY 2.

Brigadier-General Stewart reported, under date of December 29, from his camp at Mogouk that on the 27th he had encamped on a ridge commanding the town without opposition. He found that Mogouk had been looted by the Shans, who had retired, and the inhabitants were then reported to be returning to the town. The health of the troops forming the column was unsatisfactory. The intelligence received from the Ruby Mines column so far has been singularly meagre. Mogouk when visited three years ago by two French explorers was reported to contain about 10,000 inhabitants. Although Mogouk has been reached the Ruby Mines district, which extends over a considerable area, has not yet been secured.

Singu on the Irrawaddy, forty-five miles to the north of Mandalay, has been occupied, so as to obtain complete control of the country northwards to the Ruby mines and eastwards to the Shan States.

To-day General Roberts inspected the Assam police levy, a splendid body of constables, whose full complement will be 500 men. He also inspected the Shan and Burmese police levy, and expressed himself much pleased with both levies, complimenting the Burmese policemen on the great progress which they had made.

ANGLO-INDIAN PRESS.

A PLEASANT LIGHT ON SORE SUBJECTS.

(Pioneer.)

Mr. Dadabhai Naoroji expressed himself very nicely at the Northbrook Club dinner given him just before his departure from England. And though Indian politicians who endeavour to serve their Queen and country in close alliance with the representatives of extreme modern Radicalism may sometimes produce indirect effects they do not contemplate, still they may often be as sincere all the while in their loyalty to the present order of things on the whole as one cannot doubt in presence of his earnest assurances the Bombay Councillor is himself. All that Mr. Naoroji said in reference to the debt of gratitude due from the educated Natives of India of the present day to the British rule is perfectly true. Certainly the expression of this truth comes much more gracefully from the lips of a Native of India than from an English pen or tongue. But the painful part of the situation is that the great majority of Indian writers and agitators entirely ignore this fundamental idea. Then, in trying to combat the effect their apparently hostile eloquence may work upon the less reflective classes of their countrymen, exponents of English feeling are obliged to sing the praises of their own race and its rule in India in a way that is much less persuasive, naturally, than the testimony of such a man as Mr. Dadabhai Naoroji. From an Englishman that sounds like bragging, which is a seemly acknowledgment of benefits from a Native of India.

One cannot write of any Native demands in advance of concessions which British public opinion so far conceives to be for the good of India, without harping on the benefits to the country of British rule as it stands—and yet at such moments Indian opinion may not always be thoroughly in tune with representations of that kind. It is all the more advisable, therefore, to take advantage, from time to time, of a happy pause in discussions of a strictly political, and therefore more or less acrimonious character, in order to re-establish all round, amongst people concerned with Indian affairs, some broad principles of which those dwelt upon by Mr. Naoroji constitute an important group. It is perfectly true that the advantages conferred upon India by the introduction and wide diffusion now of European culture are very great, and of a kind that may fairly be regarded as having welded the two races together in bonds of indissoluble sympathy. Also that such a meeting as the Native Political Congress at Bombay last year is a "unique phenomenon" in the history of India, only possible under the régime of individual freedom that is established as completely as circumstances will allow whereon the British flag waves. A pleasant effect is produced when attention is called to these considerations by an Indian speaker. And one may readily acknowledge that another group of principles should be recognised on all hands, side by side with these; namely, that as culture advances in India and as individual liberty is exercised, there must somehow be a development of the Indo-British governing organisation to match. In reality, all sagacious Englishmen admit that as fully as all sagacious Indians appreciate the consideration proclaimed by Mr. Naoroji. But the attempt to carry out the principle in practice leads to the trouble we sometimes experience. Too enthusiastic Native reformers will proceed upon the assumption that all their countrymen are animated by the feelings they entertain, by the capacity and moral elevation which have attended the development of their whole nature under the influence of modern culture. It is hard upon the early representatives of Indian civilisation, but the truth may be that until they are far more numerous there is, roughly and broadly speaking, no place for any of them in the organisation that has not completed its usefulness in the world while they are still relatively few. Of course, if all India were peopled—and we are not now thinking of the masses—if all India above the level of the manual workers were peopled with men like or nearly like Mr. Naoroji, the existing organisation of the British Government here would be grotesquely out of place. But the truths of the situation are so remote from that hypothesis. And it does not in the least degree follow that as soon as there may be half-a-dozen Natives of India the intellectual and moral equals of cultivated Englishmen, that therefore it would be right and fitting to bestow half-a-dozen offices upon them in the hierarchy of the Government service. There is where the strain comes into play. The advanced Indian politicians or some of them will talk as if the admission of advancing India to participation in her own administration were equivalent to the admission of individually advanced Indians to places of trust in the benevolent despotism provisionally directed by England. When the time has come for any change bringing Indian agency more to the front in the management of the country, the time will have come for some modification in the institutions of the country—not merely for a little pouring of new wine into old bottles.

Surely it is because these simple considerations, which have immense force when fairly faced, are so constantly forgotten that this great and attractive process—the upgrowth of India into a new civilisation, the infusion, as Mr. Naoroji put it, of new political life into what had been before a nation descending in the scale of national organisations—is apt to look so troubled and stormy. The Radical friends in England to whose misguidance so many Indian politicians have fallen are chiefly to blame for the bad feelings engendered. They know nothing of the subtle conditions of the vast problem to be dealt with here. They are told that arbitrary power is exercised in India, and they meet a few highly intelligent and polished Indian gentlemen quite as well fit to be members of Parliament as the majority or those who sit as such; and they discover that these men have not even got votes in their own country. They want to know no more—that is case enough for a Radical orator with a Government candidate to abuse. With a page of figures out of the Statesman's Year Book and a dozen lines from an encyclopædia explaining that a part of India called Oudh was unrighteously annexed, and they are set up in trade as the spokesmen of Indian grievances. It pays them—taking the whole business of domestic politics into account—and as the British public, though stupid enough, is not so stupid as to believe all it hears, no great harm is done—except to the native Indian politicians. They are poisoned in mind, misled, corrupted in sympathies to a terrible extent by the monstrous nonsense talked on their behalf, and, worst of all, they fling themselves into the arms of the people who talk in that way when they themselves endeavour to take a part in public life in England.

No Englishman can be at once honest and intelligent and in possession of knowledge concerning this country who would try to make a Native of India believe that any rightful privilege for which his countrymen are ready is held back by the tyrannical jealousy of that governing organisation which is the British rule of which Mr. Naoroji speaks with such impassioned and just enthusiasm. Is it logical to recognise that the British rule in the past has done the splendid service to humanity and to India which the culture of a certain class in modern India now embodies, and yet to proceed as if that organisation were an unfeeling and pitiless tyranny denying the people of India their rights of self-government? It is the same British rule now that it always has been—except that subject now to a far more searching public scrutiny than it ever had to bear before, it is purified of a great multiplicity of petty vices it once was blemished with. Its larger tendencies are the same now as before, only they are pursued with the keener purpose of a more advanced philanthropy. It must go on as it is for a considerable time to come, or with modifications that will not affect the essential principles of its structure. But, firstly, we are all quite willing to accept the theory that in the long account great changes must be made, and thus to regard the strictly bureaucratic organisation of the Indian Government as a provisional state of things; and, secondly, while it has to last, surely it is not such an intolerable state of things for India, since it is the same British rule which has done the good work Mr. Naoroji credits it with, and is still going on doing this.

THE REVOLT IN AFGHANISTAN.

(Civil and Military Gazette.)

We learn by telegraph from a reliable source, that the fighting between the Amir's troops and the Ghilzais has ended at last in the utter and complete defeat, for a time at least, of the rebels. The story, therefore, of the Povindah merchants, who had arrived in India from Ghazni, to the effect that the rebellion was spreading, and assuming the form of a national and religious revolt against the English alliance, appears worth no more than the value which we set upon it. Attempts had, no doubt, been made to extend the rising by fanatical moolhas; but the cartloads of heads and the cutting of pieces of rebellious regiments was a method of treatment discouraging to doubtful rebels. As a hint to the populace between Ghazni and Cabul, a caravan of waggons loaded with heads of decapitated mutineers must have been effective, after the Amir's always effective method; and as nothing has been heard of a rising yet in the Herat district, we must suppose that the message of the Ghilzais to their clansmen has failed. Indeed a rising now would be too late. Nevertheless, the danger has been a real one, as the Government of India have been well aware. Unnoticed at the time, perhaps, in this connection we may now safely point to the significance of the orders issued to portions of the 3rd Biluchis, the 6th Bombay Cavalry, the 2-1 Mountain Battery (Scottish Division), and the Royal Lancashire Regiment, to hold themselves in readiness to march at a day's notice to Chaman, to Kila Abdullah, and to the Khojak; the journey also of the political agent of Quetta and the Peshin towards the Khojak; and the opening of a telegraph office in Kila Abdullah to facilitate communication between the political agent at Chaman and the Governor General's agent in Beluchistan. The political agent returned from Chaman on Sunday last; and the forces ordered to hold themselves ready to march will not now be required to move. For the time the storm has blown over, but the arrangements made indicate the intentions of the Government of India, should the Amir's authority in Afghanistan be seriously shaken. The rising of the Ghilzais took place at Ghazni, roughly speaking one-third of the way from Cabul to Candahar. The movement of our troops to Kila Abdullah, Chaman and the Khojak Pass—positions half-way on the route from Quetta to Candahar—would have forestalled any attempt of the rebels upon the latter place, and kept in our hands the power of occupying it if necessary with the least possible delay. The Government were aware of the possibly serious consequences of the Ghilzai rising; and were prepared to act.

A SOLILOQUY FROM THE SOUTH.

The meditations of Sir Mountstuart Elphinstone Grant Duff addressed to his own soul, and likewise published in the Gazette for the use of the public.

(Scene:—A room in Government House, Madras. G. D. alone in full uniform—strikes an attitude—solloquises.)

How grand the cannons roared. In every puff
I seemed to hear All hail! my Lord Grant Duff, Puff! bang! bang! Puff. All hail my Lord Grant Duff.
And now the feast is o'er, the guests have fled,
And Lady D. has toddled off to bed,
I'll have a weed and meditate again;
Tobacco soothes the mind and clears the puzzled brain:
A long cane chair and well iced peg's the thing.
Boy! whisky peg and little book go bring.
My wise old mentor Marcus—not St. Mark
Wolseley reads him and Kempis (what a lark!)—
I mean Aurelius' meditations;
He wrote in Greek, but I have got translations.

(Gets his peg, book, chair; takes off his coat, Sits down, and lights a long Trinchinopoly cheroot.)

Well, here I am. A king! Oh what a go!
Uncounted millions (they are black I know;
But what of that?) are mine for weal or woe.

Ah! Marcus, thy Empire was quite enough
To break most backs, but what wert thou to Duff?
Uncounted millions! Mine to let them die
By famine, or to lift them to the sky
By science and a Liberal policy!
Oh! gods how hateful 'tis to one whose life
Has passed amidst the storms of party strife:
To such an one I say 'tis gall to find Things differing quite from all he left behind!
What heaven sent impulse now my breast inspires,
'Tis Marcus' self that thus my spirit fires.
Up! up! he cries, great soul, thy work begin;
Now, now's your time, for ain't the Liberals in?
Destroy this monstrous bureaucratic breed;
A crowned Democracy is what we need,
With Duff himself, great Duff, to wear the crown,
Give household suffrage to the demos, brown
Or black, or mixed, whate'er its hue may be,
And let it seem to rule our policy;
A dusky house shall sit to frame the law,
A dusky speaker shall control their jaw.
Grant Duff shall sit enthroned above them all,
A real monarch constitutional!

(He reads Marcus Aurelius for a while.)

Ah—here's a passage that would do to cite
In the opening speech. I can't translate it quite;
I'll take the crib and see what Marcus said,
He wrote bad Greek and had an addled head.

(Looks at crib.)

Oh bother! this has quite upset my dreams.
You must he says, give up Utopian schemes.
Leave well alone, he writes, patch up the worst,
Or else mayhap the whole machine will burst.
'Tis true, wise Marcus, now I come to think;
And was not I, Grant Duff, five years the link
Which firmly binds the crowned Democracy
Of England to the great Autocracy
Paternal, which this dusky people rules
And wisely, if they did not send out fools.
Yes! Duff's, not Marcus', practised wisdom told
His fervent spirit not to be too bold,
I will, I will the struggling spirit bind;
Control the lofty thoughts that fill my mind.
Content with humbler flights that suit not me,
But fit the strength of poor humanity.
First I will early rise and with the sun
My daily course of institutions run;
Inspect the hospitals, examine schools,
And gratify the crowds of gaping fools,
Who fain would see the outward form of Duff
(As if his printed speeches weren't enough),
This done, my breakfast; then the steady flow
Of Secretaries; boxes come and go;
Members of Council too—I'll mark them well;
They'll get up early if Grant Duff they'd sell.
Thirdly, I'll study all the wants and needs
Of this vast Empire with its varied creeds.
Fourthly, the social duties shall consume
My time—grand dinners in the banquet room
And balls; a little dancing will not hurt;
And every Governor is bound to flirt:
It is the constant practise, so they say,
At Simla, Naini, Ooty, and Bombay.
It's naughty, true; but L-t-t-on found it nice
And even R-p-n tried it once or twice.
Sly dog!—Ah! well—it is a heavy blow
To leave my schemes and come to things so low!
But Duff must this renunciation make,
Not for his own, but for the Empire's sake.
Thus shall he win the universal praise
Of men; thus shall the dusky Rajas raise Subscriptions to perpetuate his fame
By smirking portrait in a rich gilt frame;
Or marble statue of a life-like hack,
With Duff, too, life-like clinging to his back.
And they who gaze shall say: "This is Great Duff:
He did not all he could, yet did enough.
Bless him for what he did, and now he's gone,
Bless him still more for all he left undone."

LOCAL SELF-GOVERNMENT.

(Englishman.)

It would almost seem from certain recent oratorical utterances that Local Self-Government was regarded as an unqualified success. The Viceroy, in replying to innumerable addresses from local bodies, has given utterance to sentiments in the highest degree worthy of Lord Ripon. No doubt much of this is the mere language of conventional oratory, but there is some risk of its being subjected to a very liberal interpretation.

The truth is that the local autonomy of actual experience, and that of theory and ceremonial eloquence, are as different as night and day. It seems an easy thing, on paper, to give certain powers to local bodies, but we have already had considerable experience of the result. At the present moment in Bengal there are many signs that Local Self-Government is rapidly bringing to the front a race question which will be difficult to deal with, and which will more than counterbalance any educational benefits of Lord Ripon's legislative heritage. In many parts of Bengal, there can be no doubt, the Muhammadans have failed to secure anything like proper representation, and their interests are suffering in consequence. It is easy to satisfy oneself on the subject by a glance at the Municipal lists that appear in the Gazette from time to time. What we should like to see is a list of the districts in question, showing the Mussalman and Hindu population respectively, the number of Mussalman representatives on the Boards, and the numbers of Hindu members. It may be argued that the proportion of each race on the Boards should not be according to total population, but to the literate population. But why should this be? The persons to be governed, and to be taxed, are not the literate only, but quite as much the illiterate, and, if the whole population of one race can find qualified representatives to be members of the board in any given district, surely the number of such members should be in proportion to the whole population. There is one special and all-important reason for adopting this principle in connection with education, for is it not the universal complaint that the Mussalmans are far behind the Hindus in education? It is not, therefore, essential, in justice to this race, that liberal provision should be made from the very outset for fostering their intellectual training, both by primary and higher schools. Is any experienced and impartial observer foolish enough to expect that this will ever be done where a District Board consists chiefly of Bengali members? This matter would be set in its true light if Government would only publish a return showing the population of the respective races in Bengal Municipalities, the funds spent yearly on Hindu schools, and the number of such, with similar figures for Muhammadan schools. We speak of course of Municipalities where the Commissioners are chiefly Bengalis, and we believe that they are so almost everywhere. As to the question of moral fitness, will any fair judge for a moment doubt whether the followers of the Prophet are not as well qualified as the educated Bengali for membership on local Self-Government Boards? Indeed, we might go further, and ask whether, in courage and independence, and in the sense of honour, a good Mussalman does not approach the nearer of the two to the European standard of these qualities. If any virtues are demanded more than others for Local Self-Government, surely these are courage and honour, courage "to follow right in spite of consequence," and honour not to do wrong, though tempted by selfish considerations. We are convinced that high principled and sufficiently educated Muhammadan gentlemen are to be found in every district in numbers large enough to represent their co-religionists, and that such men ought to be appointed on every Board, if Local Self-Government is ever to have a fair chance of success.

BENGAL SINECURES.

LETTERS TO THE PRESIDENT OF THE FINANCE COMMITTEE.

II.—The Agricultural Department.

My dear Mr. Elliott,—I am told that, whenever the subject of an Agricultural Department was mentioned to Sir Ashley Eden, he exercised himself in the invention of new and striking oaths, appropriate to the occasion; and it is even rumoured that, when the Government of India pressed him unusually hard on the subject, he went so far as to quote Rabelais in derision of them. But when the Member of Council with whom he had been waging a wordy warfare stepped into the gubernatorial shoes, Bengal was very soon equipped with a Department of Agriculture, for the good of the Indian Civil Service and the promotion of the paper-manufacturing interest. The necessary specialist was found in a civilian who had been employed for the greater part of his twelve years of service in settlements and estate management; and he was to be worthily supported by three graduates of Cirencester, two of them holders of the Bengal scholarships, which constituted the sole concession that had been wrung from the former Lieut. Governor. The programme was drawn up on the most approved lines; it included a veterinary college, model farms, agricultural shows, plenty of experiments at other people's expense, new ploughs and all the rest of the usual "trimmings." But there was a "little rift within the lute," which has been broadening ever since; and the music is very nearly silenced now.

First came the costly and warlike preparations on the North-Western frontier; and our distracted financiers, called upon to save lakhs of rupees, pounced first upon the latest acquired luxury, and looped off everything but the bare salaries of the officers of the "Department." Then as soon as peace was assured, down dropped exchange; and again the agricultural budget, which had begun to put forth new shoots, was pruned with unsparing hand. We hear no more of veterinary colleges. Model farms are maintained on an infinitesimal scale, and with a careful avoidance of expense to Government. Even the agricultural shows have faded into one or two little twopenny half-penny local tamashas; and, as far as I can make out, the agricultural work of the Agricultural Department now consists in distributing new kinds of ploughs to people who don't want them, and urging them to sell the new inventions to their friends, who won't buy them. Please observe, my dear Sir, that I say the agricultural work of the Department: I say nothing of the other work done by the Director, which is, I am told, very valuable, but has nothing to do with agriculture.

The Director of the Department is, indeed, the most misnamed man I know. He has nothing to direct, his connection with agriculture is of the slenderest, and there is no department. Two of the Cirencester graduates are still retained, I believe, but they have nothing to do, and Government probably keeps them on out of pure shame. The raison d'être of these degree-holders is the Agricultural Department; their acquirements are quite useless outside Government service, for their fellow-countrymen don't believe in them; and as agriculturists, they are completely stranded if Government does not take them up. There must be eight or ten of these gentlemen in the country now. One or two, with the wisdom of the serpent, employed their time in England in reading for the bar, and, having secured a legal education at Government expense, are now practising as barristers in India, but the rest have "fallen on evil days," and are either writing for the newspapers or teaching in schools where the name of agriculture is never heard. Two of them, I am told, have set up an academy in which the juvenile Bengalis are to be taught, among other things, to dance.

I think, Mr. Elliott, that you, of all men, will agree, in the proposition that a department of Government should have something to do; and if it has nothing to do, and no occupation can be found for it, the sooner you abolish it the better. Let us have no more agricultural scholarships. We can do without the new ploughs and the experiments in wheat and potatoes, and you can find plenty of congenial work for Mr. Finucane if you will appoint him Commissioner of Settlements, and enable him to save to Government by proper management of such work a good deal more than he draws in salary.

—Englishman.

FARMING IN INDIA.

It is not always that we see ourselves as others see us. One of our much respected English exchanges (North British Agriculturist) has an article of Farming in India in a recent issue, a perusal of which will doubtless enlighten many of our readers, who are quite up in the agriculture of the country. Our contemporary says:—"The Indian farmer has scarcely any food, but what he has is of the simplest kind. There being no hard, gravelly soil, no stiff clay, no hard pan, and no sticky calcareous soil to work, is a great advantage to him. By a very crude implement, which can scarcely be called a plough, the land is torn up. This plough consists of a triangular piece of wood, about eighteen inches in length, and six inches in diameter at the larger end, the other being pointed. On the flat side of this piece of wood a groove is made, into which a flat piece of iron, a foot in length, an inch wide, and half-an-inch thick, is inserted, and held in its place by a staple. The staple underneath does not interfere with the rooting. This iron bar, which is pointed, serves as a nose or point to the plough. The larger end of this triangular piece of wood is mortised into an upright stick, the latter about three feet in length, at the top of which is a wooden pin on the front side for a handle. About 18 inches from the ground a strip of board 3 inches wide, an inch and a half thick, and eight feet long, is inserted into the upright stick, and serves as a beam and a tongue. The yoke is a straight stick, 6 feet long, 3 inches in diameter, with four wooden pins each 6 inches long, one on each side of the neck of the bullocks. A small hemp rope, or grass twine, goes under the bullocks' necks to keep the yoke in its place. The beam of the plough has a few notches under it near the end, and is fastened to the yoke by a small grass rope. The plough makes no furrow, but simply roots or tears up the soil, and the ploughman, with his little goad or whip in one hand, the other holding the wooden pin in the upright stalk, walks by the side of the plough. The cattle are of the Brahmin species, white, slender-bodied, long-legged, and very lean. About the only feed they get for months before the rain is 'bhosa,' or wheat, straw, and chaff. Ploughing is hard work for both the little cattle and the man, and the best a man can do is to tear up three-quarters of an acre a day, and the work then is poorly done." "The land has to be ploughed in this way a number of times, especially for the more substantial crops. The cattle cost from £1 to £4 a pair, but the average price is about £1 12s. The average price of a plough is 1s. 8d. The only other implement used is a log or slab of wood 6 feet or 8 feet long, drawn sideways across the field by one or two pair of cattle to crush the clods and smooth the surface. After the land is pulverised, and this is well done too, the last ploughing takes place when a man or woman dribbles the seed from the hand into the furrow. The next operations are those of reaping and thrashing. The reaper consists of a blade of iron 6 inches in length, 1 inch in width, and curved like an old-fashioned sickle with a notched edge and a short handle. Its cost is 2d. The harvester sits upon his heels, cuts a handful of straw which he lays down, and then waddles on without rising, and cuts another lot. He cuts about one-twelfth of an acre a day, for which he receives 2½d., out of which he has to board himself. After this primitive reaping machine comes a binder, who gathers up the grain and binds it into sheaves. It is then shocked, and a day or two after carted to the thrashing-floor. The thrashing machine consists of a floor—a bit of hard ground—a stake, a number of cattle, and a driver. The grain straw is piled around the stake in the floor, the cattle are connected by a rope tied to their horns, and one end of the rope fastened to the stake, and the driver keeps them going until the straw is trampled very fine, into what is called 'bhosa.' This, after the grain is separated from it, is fed to the cattle." We trust the English public will not need further enlightenment upon this subject.—Indian Agriculturist.

BENGAL.

MR. H. C. BARSTOW is permitted to resign the Bengal Civil Service.

THE Maharana of Dholepore's illness is due to typhoid fever. He is progressing favourably.

THE REV. A. O. HARDY, senior chaplain on the Bengal establishment, has been permitted to retire from the service.

A MEASURE, which will take place, to some extent, of the C. D. Act in Calcutta, is now before the Government of India.

MR. ALEXANDER WILSON, of Messrs. Jardine, Skinner and Co., has been appointed to succeed Mr. George Yule as Sheriff of Calcutta for the coming year. The other two nominees were Hadji Noor Mahomed Jackariah and Dr. Mohendrolal Sircar.

IN consequence of the revising system in the Calcutta Small Cause Court, introduced by Justices Wilson and Trevelyan, having been found to be practically unsuccessful in its operation, the judges of the Calcutta Small Cause have recently suggested the retention of the system as regards suits for small amounts only at present, and to appoint the Registrar, or the Fifth Judge, as the Revising Judge. They are said to have also suggested in their report to the judges of the High Court that, if this trial should prove successful, the system may be gradually extended to suits for higher amounts.

THE ghee scare has scarcely subsided in Bengal when an attempt is being made to create uneasiness in the Native mind by some of the Bengalee papers alleging that the salt imported from England is either mixed with bone dust for purposes of adulteration, or that bone dust is used in the process of manufacture. A Calcutta contemporary points out that it is very improbable that bone dust is mixed with salt prepared for sale in the market. "Such a mixture," says our contemporary, "would require no profound knowledge of chemistry to detect. Salt is readily soluble in water, and bone is not, so that the testing could be done by any one and almost anywhere. We can scarcely conceive of such a mixture paying in point of cost of the two materials. The cost of salt by the mere process of manufacture is so small that it would be difficult to get any material cheap enough with which to adulterate it that would not be at once detected. If bones or bone dust is used in the process of refining salt, we are not aware of it, and cannot say anything on the subject, except that there must be a demand for salt so refined, much as there is for sugar which is refined by processes that would not perhaps always commend themselves to fastidious tastes. But we should like to know what is the object of these renewed scares. Why are they now raised from time to time? Salt has been imported for many years, and the consumption has been enormous, without, so far as is known, anybody being hurt, or any soul imperilled. It may be that there is some intention to discourage the trade in imported salt. But, if so, this is not a patriotic endeavour. . . . We should be glad to know that there is no ulterior object in these occasional alarms and incipient agitations. But the persistence with which they are urged is suspicious, and an explanation would be desirable for various reasons."

MADRAS.

THE HON. MR. R. BOURKE held his first Levée on the 14th inst., which was a brilliant success. The number of presentations was the largest known for a long time.

H.E. LIEUT.-GENERAL SIR C. G. ARBUTHNOT, the new Commander-in-Chief, arrived in Madras on the 9th inst.

THE Government of Madras has decided that, from the first of April next, one-half of the cost of Deputy-Inspectors of Schools, as well as of all charges on account of establishment and travelling expenses, are to be paid by local and Municipal funds.

It is stated that Dr. E. Hultzsch, who recently came out to India to assist Dr. Burgess in his archaeological researches, has succeeded in unravelling the mystery of the Pallava inscription from Amaravan, which has puzzled many epigraphists of note.

CAPTAIN A. P. THORNTON, Cantonment Magistrate, Secunderabad, has been appointed to succeed Major E. P. Maltby as District Magistrate, Collector, and Municipal President of the Bangalore civil and Military station.

A SALEM correspondent informs a Madras contemporary that the fruit of the prickly pear may, after all, be utilised to some good effect, for Mr. Bren, the Agent in charge of Messrs. Wilson and Co.'s Distillery at Salem, has succeeded in obtaining some good proof spirit from the fruit.

BOMBAY.

MR. GEORGE CARMICHAEL, who has been appointed a member of the Bombay Civil Service, reported his arrival on the 4th ult., and has been placed under the orders of the Collector of Ahmedabad.

MR. S. MACDONALD, Assistant Secretary to Government, in the Political, Educational, and Secret Departments, has been appointed to act as Oriental Translator to Government.

THE declaration of the results of the Matriculation Examination of the Bombay University, which was to have been made on the 16th inst., has been postponed sine die.

THE result of the recent examination for the degree of M.D. of the Bombay University has been declared. There was only one candidate, Mr. Vishal Vishnu Gokhdale, M.A., and he has been declared to have passed.

DURING the period that he acted as Resident at Hyderabad, Colonel Ross exerted himself to bring about a rapprochement between the Nizam and his Minister. Among other things he drafted a set of rules to regulate the course of business between the Nizam and his Minister, and these have now received his Highness's sanction. The new rules are expected to have the effect of placing the relations between the Nizam and Salar Jung on a more cordial basis, by removing to some extent one of the causes of friction between.

NORTH-WEST PROVINCES, OUDH, AND PUNJAB.

SEVERAL rifles are reported to have been stolen from one of the British regiments in camp at Rawal Pindi last week, and, as usual, no trace of the thieves can be found.

COLONEL WILLIAMS, Director of Army Remounts in India, arrived in Karachi from the Persian Gulf, where he has been on duty in connection with the purchase of animals for the Government, and proceeded to Saharanpur on the 1st instant.

THE 2nd Sikhs arrived in Rawal Pindi from Abbottabad on the 1st; the 14th Sikhs from Jhelum on the 2nd; and N-8 Royal Artillery from Campbellpore on the same date. The 18th Bengal Lancers march in on the 3rd. This completes the assembly of troops for the Rawal Pindi Camp of Exercise.

THE prospects for a lawyer in Kulu would not be encouraging. The people of that primitive district settle their disputes in this wise. Each party brings a goat and places it before the shrine of the temple at Nuggur, and the animal which first begins to shiver and shake wins for his owner the suit.

THE Hospital for Women in Lahore shows great promise of success. The Honorary Secretary, Dr. Elizabeth Bielby, has just had the pleasure of acknowledging a donation of Rs. 4,000 from H.H. the Raja of Nabha, whose example will doubtless be extensively followed. The institution is to be known as the Lady Aitchison Hospital. The plans for the building are now undergoing a final revision, and a beginning will shortly be made in bricks and mortar of an institution which has special and peculiar claims on all friends of humanity.

H.R.H. PRINCE FREDERICK LEOPOLD OF PRUSSIA arrived at Peshawur on the 3rd ult., and during his stay was the guest of Colonel Waterfield, C.S.I., Commissioner. In the evening his Royal Highness witnessed a Cuttack dance on the ground in front of the club. On the 4th he proceeded up the Khyber Pass as far as Ali Musjid, returning to Peshawur in the afternoon, and left by the evening train, en route to Lahore.

NATIVE PRESS.

COLD WEATHER TOURISTS.—The Sangbad Provakar says:—Several well-known statesmen have arrived in Bombay. When they travel through India the associations and the educated community of each presidency or town ought to receive them cordially, and inform them of the real condition of this country. As the officials may try to beguile them, we should put them on their guard.

ENGLISH AND RUSSIAN RULE.—The Burdwan Sanjebani says:—Many are under the impression that the Russians realise less taxes from their subjects than the English, but that is a mistake. They realise more. After the oppression of the Moghuls, the English rule appeared to us to be very mild. But, as we have been under this rule for a long time, a great desire has again arisen for a better administration. This reminds us of the story of a frog we heard in our childhood. The English are now civilised. They possess a good many noble virtues, and genuine Englishmen desire our welfare only.

"THE TIME WILL COME."—The Indian Mirror says:—A few of our Anglo-Indian fellow-subjects may rejoice over the acquittals of European prisoners in all criminal cases or the remission of sentence on a man like Gibbons. Gibbons' case may give cause of temporary triumph to a portion of the leaders of the Anglo-Indian community. But the Government ought to know that the Natives are treasuring up all these cases one by one in their hearts, whether they say so openly or not, they brood over the injustice and involved in many of these cases, the more especially because the English are reputed for their justice and fairplay. We would leave the extreme section of the Anglo-Indian Press to abuse our Native judges, our Native witnesses, our Native lawyers, and our Native journalists to their hearts' content, and in their most finished style. But a day will come sooner or later, when God's justice will vindicate the cause of right and truth, and redress all the wrongs that might have been done in these cases.

THE CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION.—The Pratihar says:—This Commission will do no good. There is very little reason to doubt that the object of the Government is to deprive the Natives of India of the privileges granted to them in 1858. If new privileges were to be granted to the Natives, the Viceroy or the local Government could grant them by issuing a notification. What, then, is the necessity for this Commission? As far as we can understand, the object is to nullify the Queen's Proclamation.

THE ENGLISH GOVERNMENT AND THE NATIVES OF INDIA.—The Pratihar says:—The English are surrounded with difficulties, on all sides. They have lost some of their best generals. Their energy is exhausted. Their pecuniary difficulties are day by day increasing. On account of the burden of taxation and other sorts of oppression, the people of India have become displeased. In spite of this, the people do not wish evil to the English, for it is contrary to their religion. But does the Government trust the people? Of all our grievances the greatest is that the Government will not trust us.

THE IMPERIAL INSTITUTE.

The following is the suggestion of the Committee as regards the Colonial and Indian Section:—

The object of the Colonial and Indian Section will be to illustrate the great commercial and industrial resources of the colonies and India, and to spread a knowledge of their progress and social condition.

To this end provision should be made for—

1. The display in an adequate manner of the best natural and manufactured products of the colonies and India, and in connection with this the circulation of typical collections throughout the United Kingdom.
2. A hall for the discussion of colonial and Indian subjects, and for receptions connected with the colonies and India.
3. The formation of colonial and Indian libraries and establishing in connection therewith reading, news, and intelligence rooms.
4. The incorporation in some form into the proposed Institute of the Royal Colonial Institute and Royal Asiatic Society, if, as is hoped, it be possible to bring about such a union.
5. The collection and diffusion of the fullest information in regard to the industrial and material condition of the colonies, so as to enable intending emigrants to acquire all requisite knowledge. Such information might be advantageously supplemented by simple and practical instruction. An emigration office of this character should be in correspondence with the provincial towns, either through the free libraries or by other means, so that information may be readily accessible to the people. These objects would be greatly facilitated if, as may be hoped, the Government should consent to the transfer to the buildings of the Institute of the recently formed Emigration Department, which would, by a close connection with the Institute, largely increase its usefulness. Facilities might be afforded for the exhibition of works of colonial and Indian art.

It is also considered desirable that means should be provided, not for a general exhibition, but for occasional special exhibitions of colonial and Indian produce and manufactures. At one time a particular colony or portion of the Empire may desire to show its progress; at another time a general comparison of particular industries may be useful. While the permanent galleries would exhibit the usual commercial or industrial products of the several colonies and India, the occasional exhibitions would stimulate and enlist the sympathies of colonial and Indian producers and keep up an active co-operation with the industrial classes of this country.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

THE NATIONAL REVIEW.*

The celebration of the Jubilee Year of the Queen's reign renders Mr. Arthur Burney's interesting article on "Jubilee Reigns in England" peculiarly appropriate to the first number in 1887 of a Conservative Review. It is not a little singular that the number three should seem to have been conducive, in just three instances, to the longevity, and length of reign, of English sovereigns. Henry the Third reigned, as is well known, fifty-six years, "in which term," says quaint old Fuller in his "Church History," "he buried all his contemporary princes in Christendom twice over." And the rule of this amiable, though weak, King, was marked by a previously unexampled advance of England in influence and prosperity. The next Jubilee—if the word be permissible—was a man of very different metal. A monarch who "killed two kings in one day, and routed a third, and had two kings, those of Scotland and France, his prisoners at one time," could not fail to make his mark on the history of his country. Whether the assembling, in fifty years, of seventy Parliaments would nowadays be considered a feat worthy of admiration may well be doubted. The third George closes the list of kings who have occupied the throne of England for half-a-century; nor is it needful to recall—"every schoolboy knows"—the terrible affliction which clouded the latter portion of his nominal rule. No Queen's reign has yet attained the duration which that of our present beloved Sovereign has reached; and the unanimity with which all classes are bent on celebrating so unprecedented, and so propitious, an event, is of the best augury.

It would be difficult to suggest a better means of marking the year, as a new point of departure for the Empire, with a white stone, than the union, in common conference, for the common weal, of Representatives of the Colonial territories of an Empire so largely extended during the Queen's reign, and on which the sun never sets; nor can too much credit be given to the present Colonial Secretary, for having taken the initiative in so important an enterprise, Mr. Greswell's remarks on which will deserve perusal.

"Disraeli's Young Men" used to be the object of many a sarcasm in the Commons, but the success which not a few of them have achieved, and which fully justifies the admirable judgment of the great Conservative leader, lends much interest to Mr. G. N. Curzon's article on "Young Conservatism." Written before the recent defection of Lord Raudolph Churchill (to which a postscript is devoted) the paper certainly shows that the prevalent tendency of the rising youth of England in the present day is towards the preservation, rather than the subversion, of the unity, and of the institutions of their country.

Oddly enough, the same tendency is shown (by Mr. Dyneley) to exist in one no longer to be classed among the young, in a comparison of the first and second parts of Tennyson's "Locksley Hall," published at an interval of some half century, the former "saturated with Liberalism," the latter "suffused with Conservatism."

Another critique on a living writer is furnished, in his usual well-known style, by Mr. Alfred Austin, in the form of a thoughtful and appreciative paper on "Owen Meredith, Earl of Lytton," which all who admire—and who does not?—the deep insight into human nature, and the fresh poetic genius, shown (to name no other work) in "Glenaveril" are "bound to" read with pleasure.

From the living to the dead is, alas! no great step; and we have two articles on those who have passed beyond the pale of effective human criticism. The former, by Mr. Courthope, deals, sensibly, and discriminatingly, with that "ever young and ever new" subject, the life and writings of the poet Shelley. The other, by Mr. Reginald Palgrave, exposes, in language of merited severity, the scandalous literary forgeries, extending from suppression to deliberate and systematic misquotation, of which Carlyle was guilty in his life of Cromwell. In this article Mr. Palgrave has done good service. Better late than never. One can only regret that the bubble of a reputation, which every day more plainly shows to have been, in great part undeserved, was not pricked during the lifetime of one of the least honourable men of letters who have lived in recent times.

The vigorous pen of Lord Grimthorpe closes (so far as the National is concerned) the Deceased Wife's Sister marriage controversy, in a few words, which appear to us effectually to dispose of Mr. Greg's somewhat laboured argument (in the last issue) for the retention of the present law.

"Thought transference" is a phrase used to cover such diversified "manifestations," real or alleged, that we are glad to see it taken up, and the ground somewhat cleared, in a paper proceeding from the joint labours of two ladies, Misses Bigg and Hatchard, which will deservedly attract attention.

Another lady, Mrs. Kennard, supplements her excellent biography of Rachel (in the Eminent Women Series, noticed in

* "The National Review." January, 1887. London: W. H. Allen and Co.

Allen's Indian Mail for 1885, p. 959) by an account—which will assuredly interest lady-readers—of the correspondence between the distinguished actress and the well-known Jewish advocate, Gremieux, who conducted her correspondence, and from whom none of her secrets were hid.

A new, and welcome, addition has been made to the National in the shape of a monthly review of home and foreign politics, of which the first instalment appears in the present number. It is written—though, of course, from the Conservative standpoint—ably, candidly, and dispassionately.

REGISTRATION OF TITLE TO LAND.*

Most of our land-holding readers will, in these hard times, regard land as a veritable white elephant. It "eats its head off," and can't be got rid of. Farms one lets but with difficulty; and, when they have been let, it is often no easy matter to get the rent paid. (One well-known landowner in a Midland county—now, alas! gone over to the majority—told the writer that for some farms on his property he had received no rent for five or six years; "though," quoth he, with a gentleman's good feeling, "I can't turn them out, for they and their forefathers have been tenants of my family for three hundred years.") And, sooth to say, it is little more easy to find a purchaser. Such are the formalities to be gone through, such the "requisitions on title," that in a sale (though the purchaser may, our author thinks, have reasonable security under the present system) he never knows when the interesting transaction will be completed; while all our attempts at establishing a registration have resulted in increased expense and delay, not to speak of a heavy outlay (p. 73) of some £100,000 for the Registry Office, which has never paid its own expenses.

We contrast this with the plans prevailing in our Antipodean colonies. These, as Mr. Brickdale plainly shows us, may be introduced into the comparatively complicated land tenures with which this country is afflicted, with far less alteration than might be supposed to be absolutely necessary. We find, on the other side of the globe, that (p. 14) "all ordinary dealings" in land "can be conducted, without professional help, at a total expense beginning at five shillings for a mortgage, and averaging £1 for all transactions." And this is done so quickly that, says Sir R. Torrens, the originator of the system, "a farmer cultivating his own land rides into a town, and goes to a broker, and says, 'I want £50 to pay my men, and he gets his £50 in a quarter of an hour,' while sales are conducted similarly. "It is an everyday occurrence," says the Tasmanian Recorder of titles, "for parties to come to the office, sign the proper forms filled up by the clerk according to their instructions, pay over the purchase money, . . . then and there at the counter, and walk off with their business completed." The titles thus mortgaged or sold are good holding titles. They have not, indeed, been subjected to the special scrutiny of a hole-picking solicitor or of a crotchety conveyancer. Nor is it requisite that this should be the case. For the titles, when first registered, are guaranteed by a fund subscribed by the person registering them, of about 5d. in the pound sterling on the value of the property; a fund which, since the introduction of the Landed Estates Act†, has (p. 75) received £180,000, while it has had to pay but £2,504 to purchasers of a property the title to which was open to objection.

This admirable system it is, Mr. Brickdale assures us, possible to introduce, with trifling modifications, into this country. A similar plan has been for years in vogue (pp. 61-106) in Prussia. But, to do this, we must dismiss all preconceived notions that the unit to be registered is land. It is (p. 99) "the estate, or interest, in, 'or charge on,' land which is the item to be registered; and, were all dealings with any of these items registered—which, were the process cheap and expeditious, would, as a rule, be the case—for forty years, there would be few properties with which it would not be easy to deal. Mr. Brickdale is, we think, far too sanguine when (on statistics which are eminently interesting) he estimates 3s. 4d. a title as the average annual expenses of a Registry comprising 50,000 titles. But, remembering that we are the most lawyer-ridden people on the face of the globe, the hope of being relieved of some portion of the existing tyranny, coupled with the astounding prospect which our author holds out to us, of getting a Government office to do anything for us, without legal intervention, quickly and cheaply, and, above all, at a fixed charge, really seems almost too good to be true. Whether or not it be realised, Mr. Brickdale has done his best to show that it is practicable; and his book is the more to be commended, in that it affects no mystery, is quite devoid of technicalities, and is pertinent as well as most suggestive.

RANCH LIFE IN CALIFORNIA.†

The young lady, whose letters this little book contains (and who may fairly be called its heroine, for an incredible amount of work and trial fell to her share), was married, at the age of twenty-one, some eighteen months ago; and, after a three days' honeymoon, started with her husband, two brothers, and a friend, for California, "to seek there, if not fortune, at least a possibility of making an honest livelihood;" the party having in hand, after defraying travelling expenses, about £500, and not £100 a-year between them. The young wife was simply, the Introduction tells us, a well-educated lady, with only the technical knowledge she gained by going into her mother's kitchen to learn "how to make bread and to roast meat." Va sans dire that the inexperienced travellers were swindled, in many ways, almost from the hour of reaching the other side of "the big drink." But a fellow-passenger gave them sound advice; and, in the end, they got a "location" in Lake County, nearly 400 miles north of San Francisco, within hail, so to speak, of English ladies who had settled in the vicinity, and who proved very kind and helpful.

That the young men had to do the larger share of the building of the house, and of other rough work, is a matter of course. But it is with the lady that we are chiefly concerned. She early learnt the worthlessness of servants—hirelings who care not for the sheep—compared with the work of ladies, who are looking after their own. "No English servant," she exclaims (p. 45), "could be got to do the work that these English ladies do."

Evelyn had to do all the cooking and washing (she had to be taught that "disgustingly difficult job," starching), the milking, baking, in fact, everything. But she did it all with a good heart, and, we make no doubt, with a thoroughly pleasant and cheerful face; and she has written a very interesting little book, which, as she herself says, will "give a good idea to intending emigrants in our class of life of what they will have to put up with," and will, if on this ground alone, be found well worth reading. It certainly fulfils the adumbration of the preface that it will show "how a good general education enables a girl readily to comprehend and practise those domestic duties which an ill-educated servant seems to find so extremely difficult." Many of the hints, derived from personal experience, will be found invaluable to intending emigrants, and not to them alone.

ENGLAND, SCOTLAND, AND IRELAND.*

"O that some Power the gift would gie us
To see ourselves as ithers see us."

Thus sang the Bard of Scotland's clime. In this instance the request has been granted, inasmuch as "England, Scotland, and Ireland" emanates from the pen of a Frenchman—albeit a Frenchman who apparently, from long residence in this country, knows more about the land of his adoption than nine out of ten of those who have never set foot outside their own land. It would be difficult to praise too highly this most charming volume, which, whether as regards the letterpress or the illustrations, leaves nothing to be desired. The former, while giving sufficient detail to instruct, is brief enough to avoid irksomeness or ennui; the latter are both numerous and beyond compare.

The work is divided into three sections, of which the first, and by far the largest, deals with England. Of course, London opens the campaign with its statistics, its streets, its remains, its religious edifices, its civic buildings, and such like. Then follows an account of the West-end, steeped in luxury and wealth, and the East-end, rising but little beyond poverty and destitution. The Provinces occupy no less than one-third of the entire volume—and what a stupendous array of marvels is spread before the reader!—marvels of skill, marvels of science, marvels of enterprise, marvels of wealth, marvels of nature, marvels of art, marvels of architecture, and marvels of engineering. Well may the astonished author stop now and again to take breath in the midst of such a bewildering embarras des richesses.

Scarcely less interesting is Scotland, with its lovely capital, its quaint costumes, its superb scenery, and its puritanical inhabitants. The land of Burns and the land of Scott well holds its own in the volume before us; and if Ireland be somewhat less conspicuous, it matters not—for no one is likely just at present to forget the Sister Isle.

Lastly, considering the size, the elegance, and the luxure of this volume, in which author, translator, and publisher seem each and all to have tried to outvie the other, the price of a guinea is moderate to a degree, that should ensure the popularity which it thoroughly deserves.

RIDING FOR LADIES.†

"Riding for Ladies" is a book of great value, and, moreover, as interesting as it is useful. As, too, it is from the pen of Mrs. Power O'Donoghue, one of our best and most experienced lady-riders, the advice it contains should be sound and trustworthy. The author is evidently devoted heart and soul to horses, and in thorough sympathy with that noble animal. The merest glance at the contents will suffice to indicate the immense amount of

* "England, Scotland, and Ireland: a Picturesque Scenery of the United Kingdom and its Institutions. By P. Villars. Translated by Henry Frith. (George Routledge and Sons.)

information which this volume contains. Not a point of detail is omitted, and lest, perchance, anything should have been overlooked, there is a "budget of tips" given as a sort of appendix. Perhaps, however, the best test of the worth of Mrs. O'Donoghue's labours is the fact that the essays which are now given to the public in a collected form have already appeared in a weekly journal, and their popularity being great, it may fairly be assumed that the success of the present venture is assured.

OBITUARY.

MR. A. W. FORDE, M.I.C.E.

The following obituary notice of an Engineer well-known in Western India is sent us by Mr. W. Martin Wood, formerly of Bombay:—

"Our 'Domestic Occurrences' contained, two or three weeks back, mention of the decease of Mr. A. W. Forde, M.I.C.E., during the last seven years Consulting Engineer to the Bombay Municipality. He was one of a class, or, rather, of several classes of non-official Englishmen in India, on whom we can depend to maintain respect for British character, energy, and skill as commercial, scientific and engineering enterprises extend in that country. Mr. Forde had spent about thirty years in India, having gone out in 1855 as Chief Engineer of the B.B. and C.I. Railway, the earlier portion of which, north and south of Surat, were constructed under his directions. His considerable previous experience, both in construction and traffic management of Irish railways, served him well, and also enabled him to see how an economic light railway system was well adapted for the purely agricultural districts of India. In promoting this object Mr. Forde had the cordial support of Sir William Denison, himself an engineer, as also of members of the Supreme Government. The inevitable difficulties that beset the promoters of independent public works in India, together with the dominating influence of the big guaranteed railway companies, prevented the carrying out of the tramways and feeder lines that Mr. Forde endeavoured to provide, and which might have saved millions of fruitless famine expenditure. When Lord Lawrence set his foot down against any further extension of the extravagance of the five per cent. guarantee, Mr. Forde came forward to support the more economical system; and in his pamphlet, "Ten Thousand Miles against Five Thousand," commended by Lord Mayo in one of his Budget speeches, he showed how much more rapidly railways might be extended and rendered effective in India by adoption of less costly methods. His last special effort in this branch of his profession was the publication of a lecture delivered before the Sassoon Mechanics' Institute, Bombay, on "Railway Extension in India with special reference to the Export of Wheat" (P. S. King and Son.) This is accompanied by an extensive and elaborate diagram embodying in graphic form all available statistics of the cost, traffic, expenditure, and financial result of all Indian railways; also a map indicating the then totals of wheat exportation from each of the five chief ports of India. That Mr. Forde was a good all-round engineer may be inferred from his having constructed the first wet-dock established within the tropics—the Sassoon dock at Colaba, Bombay—where many engineering difficulties had to be, and were overcome. Subsequently, in dealing with the water-supply and drainage of Bombay, he completed the demonstration, if that had been needed, of his being one of the most competent and practical of the Members of the Institute of Civil Engineers. During most of his career in India Mr. Forde had to work without, and often in opposition to official influence, thus exhibiting those independent, resourceful, and self-reliant qualities of the British character which the people of India always respect as an example to be followed by those of them who have imbibed the modern spirit of industrial enterprise and scientific zeal."

It is stated that Captain Taylor's further tenure of his appointment as Port Officer of Madras has not been limited to any specified term, but that the extension has been sanctioned by the Government of India to continue as long as the Madras Government are satisfied of his complete efficiency, both physically and mentally, for all the duties devolving upon him as Port Officer. There were a number of candidates in the field when it was thought there was a possibility of the Port Officership becoming vacant, including applications even from England.

MONDAY, JANUARY 3, 1887.

SIR OWEN TUDOR BURNE.

THE announcement which is made public this morning that "the Queen has been graciously pleased to approve the appointment of Colonel Sir Owen Tudor Burne, K.C.S.I., C.I.E., to be a member of the Council of India, in succession to Sir Frederick Halliday, K.C.B., who has resigned," will be received with general satisfaction not alone by the many friends of the gallant and popular officer promoted, but by the public generally. To have filled up the vacancy in the Council caused by the retirement of Sir Frederick Halliday by some other aged Indian dignitary in retirement would have been to repeat some of the blunders of the past. The Council of India, to be of any use at all, should be composed of men who still hold some touch with that country, not of those who having long ago left it, after experiences often narrowed by circumstances and personal idiosyncracies, imagine that the India of to-day is the India which they knew in years gone by. Of Sir Frederick Halliday nothing need be set down in malice, but in his Indian career the historian will find much that it will be difficult to extenuate. His character as an official during the Mutiny was sketched in burning words by the author of that brilliant brochure known as The Red Pamphlet, and if friends have complained that there was gall in the pen of the critic it must be remembered that he wrote from personal experience of the hour and of the man. The softening influence of Time moderates, happily, the bitterest of human judgments, but the record of the historian of those dark days, written in after years, still stands an uncontradicted arraignment against the Councillor who was held to be one of the evil advisers of Lord Canning. But Sir Frederick Halliday was made a life-member of the Secretary of State's Council of India, and he brought with him the same characteristics as to narrowness of views, and obstinacy in upholding them, which he had displayed in Bengal. That he had the courage of his opinions may be granted, but that those opinions were enlightened and progressive may be more than questioned. His succession in the Council by Sir Owen Tudor Burne will be acknowledged here and in India as a positive gain. The rapid strides which India has made within the last decade alone, render it necessary that her interests, the aims and aspirations of her peoples, and the whole subject of British rule in the East should be dealt with by men who are not yet out of touch and sympathy with the question of the present. Those to whom the Secretary of State should look for counsel drawn from practical experience of India ought to be as nearly men whose experience is somewhat recent as well as ripe, but certainly not fossilised. Sir Owen Tudor Burne's experience of Indian questions, civil and military, is a long, wide, and varied one. Having borne a gallant part as a soldier in the field, he was appointed, whilst still a subaltern, Military Secretary to the Commander-in-Chief, Sir Hugh Rose, an appointment requiring tact, geniality, and knowledge of character. It was then held, however, by the Horse Guards that he had two faults, youth and inexperience, and so he was obliged to vacate the post. Experience, according to Horse Guards' traditions, always waits on age, and generals qualify for Field Marshals by growing old. The world, however, holds sometimes a different opinion. It is nearly twenty-five years ago since the event referred to happened, and a Calcutta journal then said of Lieutenant Burne: "A favourite with all who know him, a polished gentleman, and a zealous soldier, with youth, ability, and application on his side, he has every prospect of making a brilliant career for himself. He should feel proud to think that the only charge urged against him as disqualifying for the high office he has to vacate is what Pitt called the 'crime' of being young." Since this was written that offence has been considerably purged; but Colonel Burne is hale and hearty, and will bring to the Council the advantages of an experience which has never lost touch with India. As Private Secretary to more than one Viceroy, and as Secretary in the Political and Secret Department of the India Office, he has certainly had exceptional advantages, but he has known how to avail himself of his opportunities, and it is this knowledge which alone helps men on the road to fame. The high opinion formed of him by the late Lord Mayo, and the esteem in which he is held by all who know him, fully justify his promotion to the distinguished position to which Her Majesty has now appointed him.

THE nomination of Sir Owen Tudor Burne, K.C.S.I., C.I.E., to the seat in the Council of India, vacant by the retirement of Sir Frederick Halliday, places the office of Secretary in the Secret and Political Department at the disposal of the Secretary of State in Council. No appointment has yet been made, nor will probably be made until the return of Viscount Cross to London.

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

THE Governor-General in Council notifies that the four Native Mountain batteries of the Punjab Frontier Force will be linked together, and all enlistments in any of these batteries, after the 15th December 1886, will be made for the whole four; that is to say, a recruit enlisted for one battery will be liable to serve in any of the other three, and will be transferred thereto if required in case of war. Beyond this liability to transfer during war to any of the four batteries, the conditions of enlistment will remain as at present.

THE Government of India are unable to exempt the heirs of deceased soldiers of the Burma Field Force from the rule in Article 238, Indian Army Regulations, Vol. 1, Part II., as the gratuity was given in lieu of donation batta, to which the article is applicable. In the case of the Egyptian campaign of 1882 and 1885 this rule was not enforced, as the gratuity was given under War Office Regulations to which the above restriction was not applicable.

GENERAL OFFICERS commanding brigades in Burma have been ordered to organise, and carry out a regular system of patrols from each post in their command. Patrols should visit all villages within a radius of five or six miles, and, where accommodation may exist, these patrols may be extended over two days. Arrangements should be made, by posts within reasonable distance of each other, for their patrols to occasionally meet. Interpreters should accompany patrols, and the villagers should be encouraged to report the state of the neighbourhood. The names of all villages patrolled, and the results of such visits, should be noted in post diaries for the information of Brigadier-Generals, and Civil Officers should be kept acquainted with any information acquired through such patrolling.

A LIST of Interpreters employed with the Upper Burma Field Force, on pay ranging from Rs. 100 to Rs. 15 per mensem, gives the number at 167, at a monthly expenditure of Rs. 7,723 or Rs. 92,676 per annum.

MAJOR LORNE CAMPBELL, officiating Assistant Adjutant-General, Allahabad Division, has been directed to join the 2nd Battalion, 5th Goorkhas, at once. Major A. G. Hartshorne, General List Infantry, has been appointed, subject to confirmation, to officiate as Assistant Adjutant-General, vice Major Lorne Campbell.

As the escort duty at some posts falls heavily on the troops, officers commanding are to be most careful in arranging that no more are furnished than are absolutely necessary. It is preferable to send few of sufficient strength than numerous weak escorts. Individual officers' carts, with stores, &c., are not always to be immediately furnished with escorts, but must wait, if necessary, until it is convenient to send one. Officers commanding posts are held responsible that their men are not overworked in this respect, and they must comply with demands for escorts according to their discretion and judgment. It is at the same time to be borne in mind that emergencies may occur which require immediate attention, and in such cases the men may have to undergo hard work. When arrangements are made for escorts to meet half-way between two posts, particular attention must be paid to carrying them out punctually; all instances of failure are to be reported to the Brigade-Major for the Brigadier-General's information.

MAJOR W. G. CRAIGIE-HALKETT, Brigade-Major at Lucknow, officiates as Assistant Adjutant-General, Allahabad, vice Lieut.-Colonel H. M. Evans, on furlough. Major R. B. Mainwaring, Royal Welsh Fusiliers, officiates for Major Craigie-Halkett at Lucknow.

CAPTAIN S. B. BEATSON has been appointed Adjutant of Mounted Infantry in Upper Burma, vice Lieutenant G. W. Burrows, who is about to raise a Burma Police Levy at Menbo.

SIR FREDERICK ROBERTS has presented a distinguished service medal to Corporal White of the Hampshire Regiment, who assisted Lieut. Lye to rescue Lieut. Cockran's body near Sagain last April.

CAPTAIN A. R. F. DORWARD has been appointed Commanding Royal Engineer to the Upper Burma Division from the 20th November.

CAPTAIN F. T. N. SPRATT, R.E., has been appointed Director of Military Signalling in Upper Burma as a temporary measure, in addition to his other duties.

CAPTAIN H. S. SMITH, Manchester Regiment, has been appointed Adjutant of the Rajputana-Malwa Volunteers, vice Captain H. S. Wheatley, who rejoins his regiment, the 1st Battalion 2nd Goorkhas.

CAPTAIN J. L. O'BRYEN, 31st Punjab Infantry, has been detailed for special service in Burma.

THE following further medical appointments have been made:—Surgeon-Major J. E. O. Ferris, 1st Bengal Cavalry, to be Civil Surgeon of Mandalay; Surgeon-Major F. A. Smyth, 27th Punjab Infantry, to the permanent medical charge of the 1st Bengal Cavalry, vice Surgeon-Major Ferris; and Surgeon J. O. C. Smith, 3rd Gurkhas, to the permanent medical charge of the 27th Punjab Infantry, vice Surgeon-Major Smyth.

MAJOR A. B. CLARE, General List, Infantry, has been granted a pension of £365 per annum on retirement from the Service.

MAJOR W. HAILLES, 4th Bengal Infantry, has been granted furlough for one year on medical certificate. This officer was severely wounded on the Manipore-Tammu line, and has been granted six months' military pay of rank as a gratuity of compensation for the severity of the wound.

THE death is announced of Major E. A. Trevor, Examiner of Military Works Accounts. He had been detained at Umballa on the way to England some weeks ago owing to serious illness, and died there on the 5th inst. Major Trevor will be deeply regretted in India by everyone who knew him.

THE RUBY MINES OF BURMA.

(Times Correspondent.)

The long renowned ruby mines of Burma having now become British property, a not unnatural curiosity has been aroused as to their extent and probable value. Two circumstances, moreover, have in an especial degree conduced to keep the subject before the public. Some months ago the reported probability of a concession to work the mines being granted to a French company gave rise to the idea that a valuable possession was about to pass into the hands of foreigners, while latterly interest has been whetted by the telegraphic reports that a British column is now on the road to take formal possession. Under these circumstances no apology is perhaps necessary for giving a short account of, first, what is actually known about these mines, and, secondly, what is likely to be their value, judging by analogy, if worked under British management.

There is not a work of any repute on precious stones which does not refer to what are spoken of as the ruby mines of Pegu, but the facts given are, generally speaking, very antiquated, and have been much modified by their travels through the hands of a succession of compilers. Tavernier's account of the mines, which was derived from hearsay, as giving an epitome of what was known of them in the middle of the seventeenth century, and as the source of the principal part of the information to be found in most of the subsequent writers, may here be quoted. He says the place where the rubies are obtained "is a mountain twelve days' journey or thereabouts from Siren (i.e., Siriam) towards the north-east, and it is called Capelan (i.e., Kyat-pyen). It is the mine whence is obtained the greatest quantity of rubies, spinelles, or mothers of rubies, yellow topazes, blue and white sapphires, hyacinths, amethysts, and other stones of different colours. . . Siren is the name of the city where the King of Pegu resides, and Ava is the port of the kingdom. From Ava to Siren you ascend the river in large flat boats, and it is a voyage of about sixteen days. You cannot travel by land on account of the forests, which abound with lions, tigers, and elephants. It is one of the poorest countries in the world; nothing comes from it but rubies, and even they are not so abundant as is believed, seeing that the value does not exceed 100,000 crowns per annum. Among the multitude of these stones you would find it difficult to meet with one of good quality, weighing three or four carats, because the King does not allow any to be removed till they have been seen by him, and he retains all the good ones he finds among them. This is the reason why, in all my journeys, I have earned a sufficiently large profit by bringing rubies from Europe into Asia; and the story of Vincent le Blanc is much doubted where he says he has seen rubies in the palace of the King as large as eggs."

Thus far Tavernier, whose localities need not here be more closely identified. From him we pass to the accounts by two other authorities, who personally visited the mines, within the present century. The first of these was the Father Guiseppe D'Amato, who saw the mines about the year 1830. According to him, Kyat-pyen is situated about seventy miles to the north-east of Mandalay. The gem-gravel occurring there was reached by pits of from 20ft. to 30ft. in depth, but extensive working, owing to the influx of water, was impossible with the primitive methods followed by the miners. Besides rubies sapphires, topaz, and oriental emeralds were also found, and spinelles were abundant. All stones above a certain weight became the property of the King, provided they were not stolen and smuggled away. Facilities for this were, however, afforded by the visits paid to the mines annually by merchants from China and Tartary.

The other authority referred to above is a Mr. Bredemeyer who about the year 1868 was in charge of other mines situated in the Sagyin hills, which are nearer to Mandalay, being in fact only sixteen miles distant. Here the gems are found in the detritus from limestone or marble rocks, indicating a not unusual original matrix for them, judging from experience obtained elsewhere. The rubies from this locality are said to be less valuable than those from the more northern mines.

Visitors to Mandalay have afforded some further information as the result of their inquiries made in the capital. The majority of the rubies found are less than a quarter of a carat in weight, and the larger ones are generally flawed. Supphires, though relatively rare, are generally of larger size, stones of 9 to 13 carats without a flaw being found, while rubies of that size are seldom seen. The revenue from the mines, which constituted a Royal monopoly, amounted thirty years ago to from £12,500 to £15,000 per annum. Such are the principal facts at present available, and no doubt to sanguine minds the prospect may appear tempting, and it may be thought that, with proper mining appliances and under British management, these mines might be made to yield a rich return. It may prove to be so, but experience in India and in Ceylon under more favourable circumstances of position does not justify that conclusion.

In these countries the building of megalithic structures and the excavation of enormous tanks were possible under an Oriental regime of forced labour and summary jurisdiction, if the term may be used. Similarly, mining under a system of jealously-guarded Royal monopolies was carried on in the diamond tracks of Southern and Central India and in the gem-bearing rivers of Ceylon. As regards the former country, repeated efforts to carry on successful mining under British management have completely failed. Some of the most famous mines of two centuries ago have been locally almost forgotten, and their identity has only recently been established after much research; but, in spite of the strong grounds which exist for believing that some of these localities in Southern India are not exhausted, the working of them is now reduced to the miserable efforts of the lowest and poorest inhabitants of the country, while at Panna, in Bundelcund, though worked by the Rajah, it is not in a much better or more prosperous condition.

As for Ceylon, let us quote what Sir Emerson Tennent wrote on the subject a quarter of a century ago, and we may do so safely, as the recent account published in the Ceylon handbook of the Colonial and Indian Exhibition does not indicate that, in spite of the reports and advice by experts, there has been any improvement in the system which is still carried on:—"By the British Government the monopoly which previously existed under the Kandyan Sovereigns was early abolished as a source of revenue, and no license is now required by the jewel-hunters. Great numbers of persons of the worst regulated habits are constantly engaged in this exciting and precarious trade, and serious demoralisation is engendered among the villagers by the idle and dissolute adventurers who resort to Saffragam. Systematic industry suffers, and the cultivation of the land is frequently neglected while its owners are absorbed in these speculative and tantalizing occupations. Of the total number of saleable stones which are found, one-fourth is probably purchased by the Natives themselves, more than one-half is sent to the continent of India, and the remainder represents the exports to Europe. Computed in this way, the quantity of precious stones found in the island may be estimated at £10,000 per annum."

In the handbook above referred to it is said that, though some returns are at present attempted by Government, it is impossible to estimate the annual yield. From the above facts it is not necessary to further indicate the obvious deduction than by remarking that the acquisition of the ruby mines of Uper Burma does not appear to offer so brilliant a prospect of wealth as has been already often claimed for it in certain directions.

Miscellaneous.

HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN and H.R.H. the Princess of Wales have been graciously pleased to accept the first copy issued of Lady Burton's edition of the "Arabian Nights."

LORD DUFFERIN AND THE HYDERABAD CONTINGENT.—The following is the text of an interesting speech made by the Viceroy after his recent luncheon, at the mess of the Hyderabad Contingent:—"Before we separate, I would beg to ask leave, both as a representative of the Queen and as the head of the Government of India, to discharge a very pleasant duty, and that is to express the very great satisfaction I have experienced in coming into contact, for the first time, with the Hyderabad Contingent. Before I arrived in this neighbourhood, I was well aware of the claims of this distinguished force to the confidence and admiration of its countrymen. Its embodiment dates from a very early period in the history of British rule in this country, and on many glorious occasions it has powerfully contributed to the security and extension of our Indian Empire. It had the honour of serving under the Duke of Wellington all through his Deccan and Mysore Campaigns, and never failed to distinguish itself by its valour on the field of battle, its powers of endurance, its loyalty, and its excellent discipline. Its cavalry on one occasion performed one of the most remarkable achievements recorded, I believe, in military history, for they covered 600 miles in thirty-one days, and thus earned for themselves the thanks of the Government of India; not only so, but in subsequent times, under the gallant Sir Hugh Rose, the contingent again rendered the country valuable service, and whenever opportunity has occurred, its officers and men have always been most eager to volunteer for any duty which might be required of them. Only recently it has been my pleasing duty to designate two of its regiments for service in Burma, and I am happy to take this opportunity of stating that I hear on all sides most satisfactory accounts of their conduct. Indeed, if proof were wanting of the high estimation in which the Hyderabad Contingent is held by the Government of India, it would be found in the case of the anxiety which we have taken in selecting officers who have been sent to command it. In General McQueen you had one of the most valuable soldiers at our disposal, and though I was sorry to lose him from the Punjab Frontier Forces, I felt he could not be better employed than in having the honour to command you. Again, the officer who is being nominated to succeed General McQueen is also held in the highest estimation by my military advisers. I am certain that under his auspices you will find your position still further improved and your interests safeguarded. My first acquaintance with the contingent took place at Aurungabad, when I was much struck with the admirable physique and appearance of the men and the remarkable smartness of the officers, and I consider it a great honour to have had them for my escorts. And now, in Lady Dufferin's name and my own, I desire to return to General Bell and the officers of the Hyderabad Contingent our best thanks for the kindness they have shown us."

A GOORKHA FRACAS.—The Goorkha, says the Lahore Gazette, is the one Native soldier with whom Thomas Atkins fraternises most readily; but this is no reason why the Goorkha should imitate the more objectionable traits of Thomas's character. On the night of 2nd November, a party of the 5th Goorkhas were about to start for Gorukhpore from Umritaur by the down train. They had lodged their baggage comfortably in the carriage, when a couple of Native police, in order to make room for more passengers, began taking it out again. The Goorkha protested, and from words the argument came to blows, and the Native police suffered. At this point a European inspector appeared on the scene, captured a Goorkha, and was walking off with his prisoner, when the rest of the party rescued him. Hereupon the inspector shouted for reinforcements; while the Goorkhas hopped about the platform like angry grasshoppers, and used their fists with great effect on the enemy. Finally three or four men of the Border Regiment interposed in a friendly manner, and soothed the ruffled feathers of the little gamecocks, the train getting under weigh without further trouble. The Goorkhas, of course, carried their kookries, but preferred settling their little differences, more Britannico, with the fist.

THE first meeting of the Supreme Council will be held next Friday. The business is almost of a formal character owing to the departure of the Hon. C. P. Ilbert and the assumption of office by the Hon. A. R. Scoble. Leave will be asked to revise the lists of standing and other committees. Leave will also be asked to introduce a small bill to amend the Criminal Procedure Code.

THE ship Ispahan, which is reported lost off the Cape on her way home from Calcutta, was a vessel of 1,436 tons, owned by the British and Eastern Shipping Company, Limited, and commanded by Captain D. Fergusson. She was chartered by Messrs. W. Vale King and Co., and left Calcutta on 9th October for London with a general cargo, principally wheat and seed.

THE Sahachar says:—"One of the suggestions of the Finance Committee will meet with general approval. There is no necessity for a highly-paid Registrar-General in Bengal. The Collectors of the districts will do the work well, and are even now doing it. The Registrar-General is a mere idol, and ought to be abolished."

THE people of Bengal will, the Englishman says, shortly witness another melancholy attempt at a popular demonstration. It seems that a determined effort is being made to get up a "monster" meeting somewhat after the style of that great success, the Jinkurgacha assembly. There will, however, be a certain difference between the two gatherings, for whereas the object of the Jessore meeting was to praise that of the present meeting is to curse. If all goes well, this gathering of the clans will take place early next year.

It is stated that Sir Rivers Thompson, in a recent resolution on the administration of the Police Department for 1885, has expressed himself in such terms with regard to the action of the High Court in criminal cases, that the Chief Justice and judges have, in a letter addressed to the Government of India, demanded that it should be cancelled, at the same time expressing in vigorous language their opinion as to the impropriety of their being criticised and censured by one to whom they hold themselves in no way subordinate.

From all sub-tropical planting settlements we have had cordial approval of the publication and an encouraging measure of support. The English, Indian, and Colonial Press have spoken in commendatory terms of the T. A., as also Directors of Public Gardens, from Sir Joseph Hooker, F.R.S., downwards, and so have all planters.

As a medium for English, American, and Australian ADVERTISEMENTS of goods suitable for the tropics, India, as well as Ceylon, the Straits Settlements, Java, and West Indies (Central America being included in that term), or connected with agriculture, the TROPICAL AGRICULTURIST stands unrivalled, the work being constantly in the hands of Native as well as European and American agriculturists. Being a Monthly Periodical, the TROPICAL AGRICULTURIST lies on the table and is very often referred to during each month, a fact which advertisers will know how to appreciate.

Mr. W. T. Thiselton Dyer, F.L.S., C.M.G., Assistant Director of Kew Gardens, writing of the T. A., refers to it as "an astonishing repository of everything relating to the economic botany of the East."

A GAZETTEER

OF THE TERRITORIES UNDER THE GOVERNMENT

OF THE VICEROY OF INDIA.

EDWARD THORNTON.

REVISED AND EDITED BY

SIR ROPER LETHBRIDGE, C.I.E.

(Formerly Press Commissioner in India, &c.)

AND

ARTHUR N. WOLLASTON, C.I.E.,

H.M. INDIAN (HOME) SERVICE.

(Translator of the Anvár-i-Suhail, &c.)

WHEN Thornton's "Gazetteer of India" was originally presented to the public, it was the only compilation of its kind, and it was obviously desirable that, within reasonable limits, the work should be sufficiently comprehensive to give the reader some insight into the history of the various localities enumerated. Since that date, however, Hunter's "Imperial Gazetteer" has been prepared, which is not only much more ample than its predecessor, but is still to be greatly enlarged in the New Edition now in course of production. In these circumstances it has been thought incumbent, when issuing a New Edition of Thornton's "Gazetteer" corrected up to date, to modify in some measure the plan of the work by omitting much of the retail, and giving only such leading facts and figures as will suffice for ordinary purposes of reference, a plan which has the additional advantage of reducing the work to one moderate-sized volume.

It is obvious that the value of the New Edition must depend in a large measure upon the care and judgment which have been exercised in the preparation of the letter-press. The task was, in the first instance, undertaken by Sir Roper Lethbridge, whose literary attainments and acquaintance with India were considered to qualify him to a marked degree for an undertaking demanding considerable knowledge and experience. In order, further, to render the work as complete and perfect as is possible, the Publishers deemed it prudent to subject the pages to the scrutiny of a second Editor, in the person of Mr. Arthur N. Wollaston, whose lengthened experience gives to his criticism an unusual degree of weight and importance. The joint names which appear on the title-page will, it is hoped, serve as a guarantee to the public that the "Gazetteer" is in the main accurate and trustworthy, free alike from sins of omission and commission. It will be found to contain many hundreds of place not included in any former edition, while the areas and populations have been revised by the data given in the Census Report of 1881.

A DICTIONARY OF ISLAM.

Being a Cyclopædia of the Doctrines, Rites, Ceremonies, and Customs, together with the Technical and Theological Terms, of the Muhammadan Religion.

BY

THOMAS PATRICK HUGHES, B.D. M.R.A.S.

Fellow of the Punjab University, Missionary of the Church Missionary Society, Peshawur, Afghanistan.

"We have at last obtained a real encyclopædia of the Muhammadan Religion, and we can only hope that the sterling value of the result of so much labour and study will receive its well-merited recognition."—Literary Wo. Id.

"An excellent service has been rendered by Mr.
Hughes in compiling this Dictionary of Islam to all those who have dealings with Moslems, Islam, or the Literature of the Arabs; and the volume before us, as the work of one man, is a marvel of industry, and fairly to be characterised as a cyclopædia of the doctrines, rites, ceremonies, and customs; together with the technical and theological terms of the Muhammadan religion."—Saturday Review.

"Mr. Hughes' competency for his task can fully be judged only by those as familiar with Muhammadanism as he is himself. He indicates great care and sound judgment. . . . We have read many of its articles with great interest."—British Quarterly Review.

"The work is unique of its kind, and invaluable to all who live in, or love the East."—Daily Telegraph.

"In the 750 pages of his present work he gives an exact explanation of every term, action, and idea of the Muslim faith, the information being in every case taken from the most esteemed Muhammadan sources, with the comments of the best European scholars. . . .
This most useful work will be of undoubted value to the student of comparative religion."—Homeward Mail.

THE CALCUTTA REVIEW.

(The only Quarterly Review in India.)

ESTABLISHED 1844.

OPINIONS.

The Calcutta Review for October reached us a day or two ago, and a glance at its contents shows that the number more than sustains the reputation which this old and favourite publication is again achieving. The Review is rapidly regaining the position which it . . .
there is no fear of the Indian Review, or the Asiatic Quarterly rivalling it in public favour.—Statesman,
October, 1886.

. . . . The best service which I ever rendered in India, or, indeed, for India, was the establishment, single-handed, of the Calcutta Review, which has done far more for Indian literature than anything I have written under my own name.—J. W. KAYE, Athenæum Club, June 23, 1872.

The Calcutta Review has given us valuable articles on the army. Some from the pen of Sir Henry Lawrence, who wrote with the spirit of prophesy, of the coming storm of which he was one of the noblest victims.—
Address of the C-in-C. at the U.S. Inst. of India.

. . . . The Calcutta Review has not only throughout its career reflected the highest honour on its public-spirited promoters and its well-known distinguished contributors, but has done much to help forward the reconstruction of our system of governing India.—Westminster Review.

—The Princeps—Sir Bartle Frere—Sir Henry Anderson
—Sir Henry Rawlinson—Sir Robert Montgomery—Sir
Richard Temple—General Sir Donald Stewart—Major-General Sir William Hill—Sir William Andrew—Sir
Julian Danvers—and others in the Appendices.

*The foregoing twelve sketches only appeared in the Original Edition.

There is also an Account of Anglo-Indian Periodical Literature, and a brief Sketch of Sporting Literature in India, in which many well-known and distinguished Anglo-Indians are mentioned.

The object of the above work (originally published in 1875) is to give, in a convenient form, sketches of some of the distinguished men who have materially assisted in building up the fabric of our great Indian Empire.
The London Press bestowed a considerable amount of praise on the former little volume, the Standard remarking that it should have been twice the size; while the Friend of India said that "every Anglo-Indian should read" what a London journal styled "a deeply interesting volume."

*The sketches have now been more than doubled.

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."
A MAGAZINE THAT GIVES EXPRESSION
TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF THE PEOPLE OF
INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing MONTHLY (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth;
but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

THE BROAD ARROW AND

NAVAL AND MILITARY GAZETTE.
ESTABLISHED 1833.
EVERY SATURDAY. PRICE SIXPENCE.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" has acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent course of its staff of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on especially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A series of Illustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" freely opens its correspondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for interchange of opinion is afforded, such as is offered by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supplements."

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" circulates largely throughout India and the Colonies.
It is supplied direct to the Army and Marine bureaux of the French, Russian, and other Governments, and it is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Services, especially of the German, French, and American Armies, who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, JANUARY 10, 1887.

General Intelligence.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 24th December; from Allahabad and Madras to the 22nd December; and from Calcutta to the 21st December.

THE Viceroy's tour this year has ended. His Excellency arrived in Calcutta on Dec. 15th, by the Indian Marine Steamer Oliva, from Madras.

THE Viceregal Council met in Calcutta on Dec. 17th. The Hon. Mr. Scoble explained that the Bill to amend the Criminal Procedure Code, which he introduced, was due to representations from the Judges of the High Court that the law, as it stands, causes considerable inconvenience to gentlemen called to serve on juries in Calcutta. At present there were only 200 names on the Special Jury List, and the Bill proposes to enlarge the number to 400. Another section empowers the police officer next in rank left in charge of a police station to act in the absence of his superior. The Bill was introduced and ordered to be published, after which the Council adjourned till the 12th January.

THE Public Service Commission has held several meetings, and has examined a number of witnesses.

THE Madras Chamber of Commerce celebrated its Jubilee on the 18th ult. with a banquet, which was attended by the Governor, the Commander-in-Chief, the Judges of the local High Court, and other notabilities.

THE Right Hon. the Governor of Madras gave a public breakfast on the 16th instant, at the Banqueting Hall, when 158 guests sat down to table.

LADY SUSAN BOURKE, wife of the Governor of Madras, held her first public reception at Madras on the 15th inst.

A LONG despatch from the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab to the Government of India has been published, urging the establishment of a University at Allahabad, and sketching a scheme for such a University.

THE Government of India, with a view to encourage the study of the Chinese language, has offered a reward of Rs. 2,000 to all officers who shall pass the higher standard.

At a special meeting, on the 22nd inst., of the Calcutta Jute Manufacturers' Association it was decided to work nine days a fortnight for twelve months from the 15th February.

THE second girder of the new Hooghly Bridge was placed in position on December 20, and thus the spanning of the river is complete.

THE VICEROY's levee was attended by 1,625 persons, being next to Lord Dufferin's first levee in 1884 the most largely attended function that has ever been known in India.

THE Government of India have replied to the memorial of the Punjab uncovenanted officers declining to add another uncovenanted member to the Public Service Commission to represent the European services. It is pointed out that these will not come under consideration (if they come at all) until a later stage of the inquiry, and in that case the appointing resolution provides for the entire reconstitution of the Commission.

It is understood that the Viceroy is in favour of the Queen's Jubilee being celebrated in Calcutta, and throughout India, in the cold season. The probable date will be either the 9th or 16th of February.

THE Nepalgunge extension of the Bengal and North-Western Railway was opened on December 17th by Colonel Forbes, the Commissioner of Fyzabad.

GOODS trains have been running over parts of the Purnia Railway for some weeks past. It will probably be opened for passenger traffic in February next.

THE Tounghoo-Mandalay Railway, it is estimated, will cost Rs. 75,000 per mile, which will give a capital outlay of 180 lakhs.

THE Jhelum Bridge has been destroyed by fire.

H.H. THE MAHARAJA OF HUTWA has given a donation of Rs. 25,000 to the fund for the Benares drainage scheme. Four leaders of the Hindu community have already subscribed the large sum of Rs. 2,25,000 for this object.

A TRANSFER of territory has been effected, between the British Government and the Scindia Durbar, by which the lands belonging to the latter, for some miles on the western side of the recently ceded fort of Jhansi have come under British sovereignty.

MR. HERBERT GLADSTONE has been on a visit to Hyderabad, where he has been entertained at dinner by the Minister.

DR. GILES, who was attached to the Chitral-Kafiristan mission, is now in Calcutta, writing his report on the geology of the country.

SIR H. C. MANCE, Kt., C.I.E., Engineer and Electrician, Persian Gulf Telegraphs, was permitted to retire from the service, with effect from the 23rd ult.

THE net amount of India sea and land Customs revenue, exclusive of the salt revenue, for the first eight months of the current official year, was Rs. 63,60,000, as compared with Rs. 63,88,000 during the corresponding period of last year.

THE Bombay and Persia Navigation Company's steamer King Arthur, outward bound, came into collision on December 18 with Messrs. Shepherd and Company's steamer Zuari, which was entering the harbour, with over 700 passengers from Goa and the intermediate ports on board. The Zuari sunk after a few minutes, but the bulk of her passengers were saved. It is believed, however, that from thirty to fifty lives were lost.

THE HON. G. H. P. EVANS has been re-nominated as an additional member of the Supreme Legislative Council.

It is understood that Captain Peacocke, R.E., is engaged in preparing a complete report with sketches of his experiences with the Afghan Boundary Commission.

A TRANSFER of territory has been effected between the British Government and the Scindia Durbar, by which the lands belonging to the latter, for some miles on the western side of the recently ceded fort of Jhansi, have come under British sovereignty.

CONSIDERABLE progress has been made towards breaking up the chief dacoit bands in Upper Burma. Something new has been seen in the hearty pursuit of these bands of marauders, for under the old rule of King Theebaw and his ancestors they could go on with their depredations without fear. From each of the chief centres columns or detachments are being sent out, and the work has so far progressed that they are often able to join hands. These centres are Mandalay, Myingyan, Nyingyan, Momb, Shwebo, and Bhamo. There is also the Chindwin force and that on the Manipur frontier.

It is suspected at Bhamo that the Chinese in Yunnan in some measure instigated the recent riots which occurred in the former place.

A RUSSIAN botanist engaged in orchid collecting at Bhamo has attracted the attention of the authorities, who are taking a lively interest in his pursuits.

THE DUCHESS OF CONNAUGHT has been robbed of a necklace and tiara of diamonds valued at ten thousand rupees. The theft was only discovered at Poona, but it seems probable that it was committed at Rawal Pindi.

THE temperance movement amongst the Natives in Guzerat is gaining strength. The Natives have sent out two temperance missionaries, one a European and the other a Brahmin, who are said to be meeting with much sympathy and attention.

THE Madras Government has called upon the local Accountant-General to prepare a statement for submission to the India Office, showing the number of persons who have accompanied the Government to the hills during the past five years, and showing also in detail the cost of the migration.

It is reported in Kashmir that a draft scheme for the constitution of a council to take charge of the affairs of the State has been drawn up by the Resident, Mr. Plowden. In the event of its becoming an accomplished fact, Dewan Luchman Dass, the present Chief Minister, would presumably be President of the Council.

THE MARQUIS AND MARCHIONESS OF HUNTLEY, who have just paid a short visit to the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-West Provinces, have visited Benares, where they were the guests of the Maharaja. They proceed shortly to Calcutta.

SEVERAL serious riding accidents are reported. Lieut. J. H. Dyer, 17th Lancers, was killed by a fall from his horse at Lucknow on the 15th inst. Captain Dalbiac sustained serious injuries by a fall from his horse at the Umballa Hunt Races on the 16th inst. Mr. Garraway, Royal Irish Regiment was severely injured by a fall from his horse whilst playing polo at Umballa on the 17th inst.

OBITUARY.—Mr. Herbert Church, traffic manager of the Madras Railway Company; Lieutenant-Colonel James Salisbury Tait, District Superintendent of Police, Kangra; Lieutenant J. H. Dyer, 17th Lancers; Colonel Seymour Barrow, 10th Bengal Lancers; Colonel C. Garstin, Senior Commissioner of Kumaon; the Very Rev. Father Lewis, Vicar-General of the Patna Vicariate.

Notes of the Week.

THE latest intelligence from India is of preparations which are being made throughout the country to celebrate the Queen's Jubilee. The Viceroy in Council has issued a notification stating that, having taken into consideration the loyal desire of the people of India to do so, and having regard to the conditions of the seasons, which were adverse to the selection of the anniversary of Her Majesty's birth, or that of her accession, he is pleased to designate the 16th of February for the purpose. The day will be observed as a public holiday.

LORD DUFFERIN, says the telegram published this morning, confidently leaves to the discretion of the local Governments acting in concert with the people, and more especially to the deep, unaffected loyalty of Her Majesty's subjects the measures which shall be undertaken to celebrate the Jubilee with appropriate honours. His Excellency feels sure that the executive authorities may on this occasion safely yield the initiative to the spontaneous action of the Municipal Councils and the community at large, and that the unanimous voice of the Empire will gratefully tender to Her Majesty the Queen-Empress homage worthy of the noble character of her life, and the justice and benevolence of her reign.

THE news from Burma continues to be satisfactory, and there is every probability of an early pacification of the country now in revolt, and even the Shans seem likely to become friendly. But an enormous police force has to be raised, drilled, and equipped before there can be any great diminution of the military strength now on service in the disturbed districts. The amount to be received by the Government of India for the lease of the mysterious Ruby Mines, which are now in English possession, will hardly suffice to cover the extraordinary expenditure which will be necessary to reduce Upp or Burma to order.

THERE are many persons in India as well as in England to whom the news of the very sudden death of Mr. Bullen Smith, C.S.I., will be sorrowful intelligence. From the time of his landing in Calcutta in a junior position in the well-known firm of Jardine and Co. until his leaving the country, after working his way to a partnership and becoming a member of the Viceroy's Council, Mr. Bullen Smith won respect and esteem from all manner of men with whom he was brought into contact in either business or social relations. His high character as a British merchant gained him the full confidence of the Chamber of Commerce, and during his period of office in the Supreme Council no one worked harder or more conscientiously to advance British commercial interests in the East, and that, too, without attempting to trample upon or ignore Indian rights.

HE was not less useful and trusted in the Council of the Secretary of State for India, where the loss of his ripe experience will be considerably felt. The vacancy caused by his death had not been filled up to the time of our going to Press, but rumour has already been busy with several names. Amongst those mentioned are the names of Sir A. Lyall, Mr. J. M. Maclean and Colonel G. B. Malleson. The first-named is not anxious to leave his Indian post yet, the second is not likely to give up the prospect of a Parliamentary career which promises better things, and the last is the author of "The Red Pamphlet" and the historian of the "Indian Mutiny." However gifted and fitted for the vacant appointment, Colonel Malleson's presence at the India Council Board would possibly be too severe a shock for the nerves of more than one distinguished Anglo-Indian official clinging still to the repose of that calm and dignified retreat. It is possible that the vacancy may be filled up from within the India Office itself, as was the case in the vacancy caused by the retirement of Sir Frederick Halliday.

TRAVEL, like poverty, brings together sometimes queer companions. Sir Roper Lethbridge and Mr. Herbert Gladstone met accidentally on the Mysore railway and journeyed together to Madras. Both purposed to attend the National Congress at Calcutta, but the Times correspondent has not telegraphed the interesting intelligence of how the "extremes" met on that occasion.

THE French Government is availing itself of the abilities of an Anglo-Indian inventor. Mr. Richard Morris, whose military inventions and improvements were recognised by the Indian Government, and have been greatly approved of by the War Office authorities here, has been commissioned by the Government of the Republic to construct a number of his Safety Shooting Sheds to be placed at various military centres in France. A committee ordered by the French War Office made a thorough investigation of his invention, and reported most favourably upon it. In the meantime our Royal Engineers are tinkering away at the range at Wormwood Scrubbs—spending more money, but obtaining less safety.

Is it the case, as stated by a military contemporary, that by a decree of the Egyptian Government the Indian rupee has in that country to-day a value of 1s. 2½d. only? If so, another plague has to be added to the historical ones of old, but those were felt only by the Egyptians themselves. In the present instance it will be the unfortunate Indian sojourner or stranger within the gates of Cairo who will suffer. But has the protecting power of England no influence to check eccentricity in Egyptian dealings with currency?

No better appointment or more deserved promotion could be made than that of the nomination of Mr. Adolphus Moore, C.B., to the office of Secretary in the Secret and Political Department of the India Office, rendered vacant by the transfer of Sir Owen Tudor Burne to the Secretary of State's Council. Mr. Moore entered the old East India House in 1858, and retired from the new one in 1885. He has served in varied and most important positions, especially in the very department which he has now deservedly been made the head of. Lord Randolph Churchill insisted upon securing his services as his Private Secretary when he came into office as Secretary for India and also as Chancellor of the Exchequer. But Mr. Moore's knowledge, zeal, and abilities are too well-known to require any notice of commendation in the Press. He is the right man in the right place.

LATEST INTELLIGENCE.

(BY TELEGRAPH.)
(Times Correspondents.)
INDIA.

CALCUTTA, JAN. 9.

The total number of victims by the great fire at Madras on New Years Eve, including the deaths which have since occurred from injuries received during the panic, now amounts to 402. A searching inquiry appears to have satisfied the police that, although several robberies took place during the confusion, there is nothing leading to the belief that the fire was due to incendiarism. There seems to be no doubt, however, that much mismanagement and some instances of gross carelessness occurred. There was a fire engine close at hand and several fountains were within the enclosure, but the hydrants were locked and the keys could not be brought or a supply of water made available until the fire had been raging for 15 minutes, and most of the booths had been consumed. Dr. Chester, professor at Doveton College, one of the secretaries of the fair, stated at the inquest that the fire appeared to begin in two places simultaneously. There were four gates to the enclosure. The crowd, becoming panic-stricken, rushed towards one gate. Almost at the same moment a rumour spread amongst the people outside that a cheetah had got loose from its cage, and a second crowd rushed to take refuge inside the enclosure, thus blocking all the passages. If the people had stood quietly in the centre of the enclosure there would probably have been no loss of life. The lamentable results were entirely due to panic. The scene was a terrible one. Dr. Chester says that the people were fighting to get out, scrambling over men's heads and shoulders. There was a barrier of human beings in heaps of four or five feet high. A number of soldiers who were present gave material assistance in dragging the people from the flames. The medical staff and students of the General Hospital were engaged all night in attending the injured.

Next morning a ghastly scene presented itself. Corpses were lying all over the enclosure, and at one spot there was literally a pile of dead bodies. Some of the bodies were burnt and charred beyond recognition, while others were untouched by fire. The positions of some clearly showed that severe struggles and agonies had taken place before death. Men, women, and children were intermingled, and a mother and her children were found clasping each other. Large crowds were pouring into the park, some as sightseers, while others, with hair dishevelled, and mad with grief, ran about looking for their relations among the dead. Some of the victims in the agony of burning rushed into a tank, or into the Cooum river, and were drowned. The Commander-in-Chief and Lady Arbuthnot had a narrow escape, having left the enclosure just before the fire. The Maharajah of Vizianagram distinguished himself by courageously saving the lives of two Eurasian girls. Other gentlemen present worked vigorously. A public meeting has been called for the purpose of starting a relief fund.

BURMA.

CALCUTTA, JAN. 9.

Four thousand additional military policemen are to be recruited in India for service in Burma. One thousand will be raised at Allahabad, from the North-West Provinces; 1,000 at Lucknow, from Oude; 1,000 at Unrisur, from the Punjab, and 1,000 in the Bombay Presidency.

Telegrams received from Rangoon state that Mr. Gladstone, Deputy Commissioner of Ningyan, who was shot in the thigh by dacoits last Wednesday, is progressing favourably.

Sir C. Bernard will return to Mandalay to-morrow.

MANDALAY, JAN. 9.

General Roberts, accompanied by General White, Colonel Protheroe, C.S.I., A.A.G., Colonel Pole-Carew, and Major Hamilton, will start on the 11th instant for the Ruby Mines. The party will go by river to Khanyat. The Commander-in-Chief wishes to inspect the district, and to decide on the strength of the garrison there. The latest intelligence from the Ruby Mines is not altogether satisfactory. The local Tsawbwas refuse to submit. Another matter which will specially engage the attention of General Roberts is the selection of a site for a sanitarium among the Shan mountains. It is hoped that a suitable situation, sufficiently elevated to be beyond fever range, can be found. General Roberts will not interfere in questions connected with the concession of the Ruby Mines. He will probably be eleven days absent from Mandalay.

It has been arranged that General Roberts shall leave in February, when General Arbuthnot, Commander-in-Chief in Madras, succeeds to the chief command in Burma. General Arbuthnot will remain in Upper Burma until the commencement of the rains.

The strength of the military police force in Upper Burma is fixed at 16,000 men, independently of the military garrison. It is very important that the command of the police forces in Upper and Lower Burma, which will together reach nearly 30,000 men, should be intrusted to specially able officers. The future condition of the country mainly depends on the management and organisation of the police force.

A large fire broke out yesterday in Mandalay, and 400 small houses were burnt down. A strong breeze was blowing, and it was difficult to check the flames. The fire was of accidental origin. The people behaved well, and the Burmese policemen were very useful.

The column which left for the Shan States has established without opposition a post at Pyingoung, 21 miles to the west of Hinedat.

Colonel Lockhart reports favourably concerning the Yemethen district.

AFGHANISTAN.

CALCUTTA, JAN. 9.

Mahomed Sarwar Khan, Governor of Herat, has been detained at Cabul pending the investigation of a charge of misappropriating the revenues of his province. Meanwhile, Kazi Saaduddin, the officer who accompanied the Afghan Frontier Commission, is appointed as acting Governor of Herat.

It is stated that the taxes which the Ameer sought to impose on the Ghilzais, and which were the immediate cause of the recent revolt, amounted to five rupees on every man emigrating to the Punjab to seek employment, ten rupees on every girl married and on every son born, and five rupees on every widow married and on every daughter born.

BHOTAN.

CALCUTTA, JAN. 9.

The Calcutta Englishman states that the Chinese Resident at Lhasa has reported to Pekin that he had sent some Chinese and Tibetan officers to inquire into the recent disturbances in Bhutan, that their mediation had restored order, and that it had been arranged that in future, on the occurrence of a vacancy on the throne of Bhutan, the people should elect the successor, and submit the name of their nominee for the approval of the Resident at Lhasa. This would seem to show that Chinese influence has been established in that State.

A Poona paper states that Private Dumphy, of the Lancashire Fusiliers, who was to have been hanged on Tuesday at Nusseerabad, has been reprieved.

WHEN the Artillery anywhere "goes out for its annual practice" the natural question arises:—How many Natives in which village will explode themselves in trying to open a live shell picked up afterwards? This question has been satisfactorily answered from the vicinity of Meean Meer, where three Natives in a village six miles off have been killed. We are told that scientific artillery has made great strides of late; but one more stride, in the direction of explosives guaranteed to explode when fired, would be a good thing. If this is impossible, a shell-finder after firing, as we have a range-finder before it, would not be amiss. It is hardly fair on the Natives, who can only conceive an oval metal casket as the holder of great treasure, to leave twenty-four-pound live shells about their maidans.

ONE indication of declining interest in municipal administration at Calcutta has been afforded by the results of the last election in November, 1885. There were 404 per cent. fewer applications for registration than in 1882; 205 fewer persons voted than in 1882; and the numbers registered as qualified to vote showed a falling-off of 1,039, or 10 per cent. less than on the former occasion. The last decrease may partially be explained by a more rigid scrutiny of claims; but it is impossible not to see in the figures generally the growth of a reluctance to take any share in municipal matters. This reluctance is more pronounced among the European and Eurasian communities. Taking the four European wards, there was a diminution of 34 per cent. in the number of those who applied for registration and of 27 per cent. in the number who actually voted.

ANGLO-INDIAN PRESS.

INVALID EUROPEAN SOLDIERS IN INDIA.

(Madras Mail.)

There is probably no one of a corresponding status in life better cared for, as a rule, than the British soldier in India. Discipline, as a matter of course, he has to put up with, since he cannot have altogether the freedom which he enjoyed in civil life; but the discipline is made to bear as lightly on him as possible, and is scarcely felt by the well-conducted soldier at all. Off duty he has his recreation room, billiard table, cricket, boating, and shooting clubs, and many little amusements and advantages he could not hope to possess in civil life; and should he fall sick he has skilled medical aid always available, and a hospital replete with the comforts of life. Here he is carefully treated, and he is not called upon to resume his duties until the medical officer considers him thoroughly fit to do so. Medical officers are, as a rule, kind-hearted men, and it is seldom the case that a patient in a Military Hospital has to complain of want of attention. Should his ailment be of a nature requiring change, he is, as soon as practicable, brought before an invaliding board, and either despatched to the hills, or invalided to England. But this invaliding is a tedious process, and in many cases cannot be carried out until too late, and it is to the existence of this evil that we would call the attention of the military authorities.

At present the hands of the medical authorities are tied, and, no matter how essential it may be for the patient's recovery that he should be sent out of the country as quickly as possible, nor how urgent the medical officer may deem the case, military red-tapeism demands that the patient must wait until the case has been elaborately reported on, and made the special inquiry of a periodical invaliding board, presided over by the Deputy Surgeon-General of the District. Now, invaliding boards are only assembled twice a year, prior to the trooping season, and even then, when passed for England, the soldier has to await the pleasure of the military authorities who may, or may not, send him by the first transport. Thus it too often happens that a soldier, who, if he could be invalided home at once, would recover, is left to await the inevitable board, and the approaching trooping season, with the result that when finally passed it is too late, and he either does not live to embark, or is in such a prostrate condition that he does so only to die on the voyage home. Cases of this nature occur frequently, and how often does a medical officer hear the cry "I'd be all right, sir, if I could only get to England." But the doctor is powerless to see him, and the man has to take his chance. It is a crying injustice that the regulations which empower a medical officer to assemble a board, and instantaneously invalid an officer, should withhold that power in the case of a private soldier. The life of the humblest private soldier is of as much importance to him as is the life of a General to such an officer. Only recently a case came under our notice of a Surgeon-Major having to bring officially to notice the fact that a non-commissioned officer, suffering from hepatitis, passed by the invaliding board, three months previously, had not yet been provided with a passage, and that, if detained longer, a relapse was feared. This non-commissioned officer was invalided to the Colonies, and the same miserable parsimony which would not have provided a passage to England in a P. and O. steamer before the trooping season compelled him to wait until the P. and O. Company, having failed to secure sufficient passengers for the Colonies at ordinary rates, could take the invalid at Government contract rates. The invalid, longing for the fresh air of his native land, yet compelled to await, through the heat of an Indian summer, the ensuing trooping season, might well exclaim with Romeo:—"I must begone and live, or stay and die!"

A NIGHTMARE OF NAMES.

(Civil and Military Gazette.)

It was a wearied journalist who sought his little bed,
With twenty Burma telegrams all waiting to be read.
Then the Nightmare and her nine-fold rose up his dreams to haunt,
And from those Burma telegrams they wove this dismal chant:—

"Bethink thee, man of ink and shears," so howled the fiendish crew,
"That each dacoit has one long name, and every hamlet two.
Moreover, all our outposts bear peculiar names and strange:
There are one hundred outposts and, once every month, they change."

If Pongdounzoon and Pyalhatzee to-day contain the foe,
Be sure they pass to-morrow to Gwebin or Shwaymy-o.
But Baung-maung-hman remember, is a trusted Thoongye Woon,
The deadly foe of Maung-ihang-hlat, Myoke of Mounk-kzc-hloon.

"Pongthung and Waustung-chung are not at present over-thrown,
For they are near the Poon beyond the Hlinedathalone;
While Nannay-kone in Ningyan is near Mecakaushay,
But Shway-zet-dau is on the Ma, and quite the other way.

"Here are some simple titles which 'twere best to get in writing,
In view of further telegrams detailing further fighting:—
Malé, Myola, Toungbyoung, Talakso, Yebouk, Myo, Nattik, Hpan-loot-kin, Madeah, Padang, Norogan, Mo.

"Pakhang, Samaitkyon, Banzé, Mine-tseil, Ming-the-Kulay, Mantsankin, Toungbain, Bompan, Aeng, Naung, Banza, Kansau-mya.
Ktcepauts, Salung, Enlay, Yindan, Nwa-Koo Mahan-gyee-kin, Kek-kai, Nat-lone, Salay, Toung-lone, Yibon, and lastly Tsin."

It was a wearied journalist—he left his little bed,
And faced the Burma telegrams, all waiting to be read;
But ere he took his map-book up, he prayed a little prayer:—
"Oh! stop them fighting Lord knows who in jungles deuce knows where!"

OUR TROOPS IN BURMA.

(Madras Times.)

Nothing surprises ourselves more than the inability which is so commonly shown, not merely by the public, but by our own military men, to realise what military expeditions in these modern days mean, as to carriage or transport. We talk about the despatch of an Army corps, or division, here or there, without the faintest idea of what the movement of modern troops involves upon even the most trifling scale, where the country to be traversed by them has no resources for the supply of their daily wants in food, forage, and water. As a fact, it is impossible to move an army corps of 30,000 men in these days through any country where its wants cannot be supplied by daily military requisitions upon the population. Where there are no people, or where the inhabitants are very sparse, modern troops cannot be moved at all, from the impossibility of carrying their supplies with them. The extraordinary blindness of Simla to this fact has been our astonishment for years past. The restless military spirits who annually haunt the hills, talk of sending an army corps to Herat or to the Pamir, without the faintest idea of what such an expedition means, or that it is practically impossible, and as impossible for Russia as for ourselves. It is comparatively easy—at all events, it is possible—to move large forces through a rich and well-populated country, because the food reserves stored in every town and village they pass through can be laid under military requisition. The people endure untold sufferings under such an invasion, famine constantly following in the wake of war, through the armies exhausting the resources required for their own maintenance from season to season. But how are you to feed, say 30,000 men only, marching at the rate of eight miles a day? For these 30,000 men are the combatants only, and the march of an army corps of that strength in any country means the daily dropping down of an immense city of 70,000 or 80,000 men, with a vast transport service of 100,000 horses, camels, mules, or other animals, to be fed and watered daily. Our military men, in spite of their professional education, seem no more able to realise this fact than the ordinary layman, and will talk as wildly as an enthusiastic schoolboy of our marching 30,000 men from our North-Western Frontier to Herat, and another 30,000 through Cashmere. Put to the test, they could not send 10,000 men in either direction, with any amount of preparation for the work, and it is of course the same with Russia.

We have an almost amusing illustration of the text upon which we have been so long harping in the experience of our troops in Burma at this moment. We have all heard of the preparations for an armed expedition to the Ruby Mines of four hundred soldiers only, under the command of Colonel Cubitt. An officer who is to accompany this force contrasts very graphically what he calls the theoretical expedition as it was conceived at Mandalay with the practical one as it has really to come off. The theory was, he tells us, that on the "arrival of Colonel Cubitt the force marched in four days to Sagadoug, in ten more days it went up the hill, captured the mines, and in some three weeks I was to be back and get a brigade.

"The practical one is as follows:—Sagadoug is forty-one miles off, with several nullahs or rivers to cross; the country only produces 150 carts at most; and beyond a little grass there is not a single ounce of any kind of fodder. Therefore, as the total length is eighty odd miles, a depôt must be formed at Sagadoug, and at least a month's provisions for man and beast thrown into it. As the followers (transport attendants, and so on) will number close on 650, and the fighting-men another 650, provisions for a month means thousands of maunds, and, on a calculation, provisions for 700, for a month is just equal to that of the 1,300 men. Then the garrison of Sagadoug has to be rationed and so on—result: about the 15th November the Tangué river will be bridged, and the first big convoy of 115 carts will go and carry 750 maunds to Sagadoug. The garrison of that place will then be 670 all told. The carts then return and leave here again on 25th, carrying 1,000 maunds more, and again on 3rd December. The company of the 51st Regiment and the two mountain guns go at the same time, and are to stay at Sagadoun in case of need. The 4th convoy of December 9th takes up the balance of stores for the actual expedition of the hill, and about that date Colonel Cubitt, V.C., the headquarter's staff, 43rd Queen's Light Infantry, and I go. We arrive at Sagadoun about December 13th, and, shortly after, the expedition begins, while the carts go on bringing up rations."

We could hardly desire a more complete illustration of what we have been writing on this subject for years past. Our military authorities—men like Sir Charles Macgregor, who are the authors of these expeditions—have not the faintest idea of what they mean, and it is not until we are in the campaign that they find it out. A single week of the business of transport and provision for the expedition makes every face black, and before a month has elapsed every one, from the commanding officer downwards, is cursing the folly that suggested the enterprise. The line of march taken by the small forces organised for the Afghan invasion of 1878 was a sight never to be forgotten. Long before either division of the troops had got a hundred miles through our own territory, the confusion and distress of each were indescribable. And unless matters have been very much changed since, it would be precisely the same to-day. Were an order to go forth for the despatch of 10,000 or 15,000 men only either to Candahar or Cabul, it would convulse the arrangements of the whole army from Lahore to Cape Comorin. We have now been twelve months at war in Burma, and have seen the effort required to place even a small force at Mandalay, with water and railway communication at our disposal, and several distinct bases for the supply of the commissariat. It remains true unhappily—that not one man in a hundred seems able to count.

THE UNCOVENANTED SERVICE. (Bombay Gazette.)

No one can have read the case submitted to Sir Horace Davey on behalf of the uncovenanted servants of the Government of India, and the documents accompanying it, without being struck with admiration for the skill that the authors of Pension Codes and Regulations, and the writers of despatches and resolutions have shown during the past thirty years in obscuring a question which in any other service but that of Government would not have been the subject of a moment's doubt or confusion. It is perhaps a happy thing that the matter has not gone into the law courts. There it would have been the fruitful theme of endless disputations, the certain effect of which would have been to demonstrate the infinite capacity of departments for veiling in obscurity what might be made as clear as daylight. The simple fact that so many thousands of men in India, who went into the service with their eyes open, do not know without taking counsel's opinion whether the shillings that the Government contracted to give them will be worth twopence or ninepence halfpenny when they reach their pockets is something of a scandal, no matter whether the contention of the Government or the contentions of the uncovenanted be the correct one. Sir Horace Davey's opinion will lead to Parliamentary action; his clients, acting on the advice that they have no legal case, will on the first opportunity see if they have not a Parliamentary one. In that enterprise we wish them every compensation for their present disappointment that they are in equity entitled to. But does not this inquiry, even at its present stage, challenge the Government to do something in the interests of clearness and simplicity of rule? It seems to us to be little short of a scandal that a controversy like this should ever have arisen. It would never have arisen if the contracts and the regulations of the Uncovenanted Service had been drawn—as there is no reason why they should not have been—with ordinary clearness, and if the India Office and the various Governments concerned had sought after finality. Instead of this there has been a vagueness of definition leading to confusion on all hands; new rules have been introduced at the caprice of Secretaries of State, or even of subordinates and clerks; claims of all kinds, warrantable and unwarrantable, have been set up, and, finally, the lawyers have had to be called in to advise what it is that the Government of India has undertaken to give its servants on their retirement. It is a fortunate thing for everyone concerned that it is not as easy to take a Government into court as it is to take its subjects, for no community could be regulated by confused and contradictory rules such as those which apply to the Uncovenanted Service of India without becoming ruinously litigious. If the simplification and codification of the whole body of regulations bearing upon this subject is not an early outcome of the controversy its chief lesson will have been thrown away.

Sir Horace Davey has given no advice upon the policy which has permitted these regulations to accumulate, hiding everything that they were intended to bring into view and obscuring everything that they ought to have made clear. He was not asked to advise upon that matter, and he has kept silent upon it. But the Government cannot well be indifferent to the discredit which is brought upon them by the complaint that the question of law in the cases submitted to him was complicated by the variety of the arrangements under which the uncovenanted servants entered upon their employment, and the changes made in their pension rules—changes made "sometimes by a formal ukase of the authorities in the form of revised and corrected regulations; or, as appears from an examination of the Pension Codes, by a simple note appended to the rules by some clerk of the Financial Department." This may, however, be submitted to the Government in the hope that the evil will be amended as promptly as departmental evils can be amended. The complainants, meantime, have done wisely in accepting the opinion given by Sir Horace Davey, adverse though it be, instead of dealing with it as the evidence of witnesses who curse when they are called to bless is usually dealt with by those on whose side they are called. They admit, as the organ which has specially championed their cause puts it, that the Government hold them in a vice. The question, according to Sir Horace Davey, really began with 1862, before which date the pensions of uncovenanted officers were payable only in India. In that year, however, a number of them memorialised the Secretary of State for the privilege of drawing their pensions in England. The privilege was granted, but it was accompanied by the condition that payment should be made at the rate of exchange fixed from year to year for the transactions between the Government of India and the Home Government. The astute solicitors who drew up the case for submission to Sir Horace Davey were anxious to know, amongst other things, if this condition bound any others than the memorialists. But neither these latter nor the Secretary of State can have foreseen how this condition would operate in the course of time, and there must have been many who had nothing to do with the memorial who gladly made use of the privilege, subject to a condition which at that time, with the rupee at high value, was anything but onerous. If the drawing of the pension at home is a privilege, those who make use of it can scarcely be expected to do so unconditionally, and here, doubtless, is the weak part of the case of the uncovenanted. As Sir Horace Davey puts it, "if any gentleman, for his own convenience, desires to have his pension paid by the Government in England the Government are entitled to fix any conditions they think fit to their consent to comply with his desire or request." It seems from this that the only remedy at present open to the uncovenanted officer who is not satisfied with, say, £350 in England is to stay in India and take 5,000 rupees instead.

We cannot wonder if people confronted with this alternative think that they are badly used. Those of them, for instance, who are under special agreements in which "all payments to be made under these presents" are promised at the rate of ten rupees to the pound sterling, and who have drawn furlough allowances in England at that rate, will not find consolation or even conviction in Sir Horace Davey's advice that they have no claim to sterling pensions. Such men may be excused if they cling a little obstinately to their belief that, pace the eminent equity lawyer, the Government do contract some sort of obligation to pay in sterling when they choose sterling as the term in which to express the maximum pension. They will ask why, when it is just as easy to write rupees as pounds, the Government have chosen to name the maximum pension rate in pounds sterling while they have named salaries in currency. If their object was to raise unrealisable expectations they have succeeded admirably in it. But it is not in this way that a contented service is secured. Mr. Seymour King may have some difficulty in satisfying the House of Commons that weak as is his case when looked at from the point of view at which alone it could be regarded by Sir Horace Davey, it is a valid one when looked at in the light of equity and fair-play. If, however, he is able to show that any considerable number of the servants of the Crown in India entered upon their service under a delusion fostered by the ambiguity of the regulations promulgated by the Secretary of State, he will lay, at all events, the foundation of a good case. And as it is only the Uncovenanted themselves who can provide him with evidence upon that point the success of his intervention will depend very much upon the spirit with which he is supported by the service in India. We have not yet seen any very striking manifestation of activity on their part. But they are, doubtless, aware that this is essentially a case for self-help.

BENGAL.

The publication of the life of the Hon. Kristodas Pal is announced.

SIR ROGER LETHBRIDGE, it is stated, will attend the National Conference at Calcutta.

MR. E. W. CAMPBELL, Locomotive Superintendent of the East Indian Railway Company, has been appointed Acting Agent in the place of Mr. Bradford Leslie.

THE DUKE AND DUCHESS OF MANCHESTER and the Lady Alice Montagu arrived on the 15th inst. at Calcutta, where they will reside at Government House. Lord and Lady Rosebery are expected in the first week of January.

A CALCUTTA contemporary hears that Dr. H. E. Busteed, whose charming little book on "Old Calcutta" commanded a deserved popularity among Indian readers, is now engaged in his retirement at home in bringing out a new edition, which will be much amplified, and illustrated by portraits of ladies and gentlemen of the settlement who were local celebrities a century ago. Dr. Busted has devoted himself to research among old books, newspapers, records, and tombstones with indefatigable industry, and fortunately his literary style is as graceful and entertaining as his knowledge is profound and accurate.

LORD HERBRAND RUSSELL, Aide-de-Camp to the Viceroy, is, says a Calcutta paper, about to inaugurate a sport which will almost throw the paper chases in Calcutta into the shade. Eleven couples of boar hounds have been despatched from France, and with their help many an enjoyable day will be spent hunting the wild pig in the neighbourhood of Calcutta. The animals, who are expected by a French mail steamer, are timed to arrive at Calcutta about the end of the month, and will be kennelled at Barrackpore Park.

MADRAS.

At the instance of the Finance Committee, the Government of India have decided on large reductions in the establishment of the Madras Revenue Survey office, from 1st April next. The appointment of First Civil Assistant, now held by Mr. W. Starr, and carrying with it a salary of Rs. 500 per mensem, is to be abolished from that date, Mr. Starr being sent on pension. The office will shortly be moved into the building lately occupied by the Eye Infirmary, and where the office of the Commissioner of Salt and Abkari Revenue is at present located, the latter going into Chepauk. The estimate for the removal of the plant and machinery of the mapping and photographing departments, and the adaptation of the building for the purposes of the Revenue Survey office, &c., was put down at Rs. 20,000 by the D.P.W.; but as this sum can ill be spared just now, it has been decided to retain the mapping, photographing and a portion of the Record Department at Chepauk, the clerical establishment alone being removed to the new quarters at a cost of Rs. 3,000.

ONE of the appointments spotted out by the Finance Committee as a likely one for operating on was that of Cantonment Magistrate of Cannanore. This post is at present held by a full-time officer on a salary of Rs. 700 per mensem, but the Finance Committee think that the duties developing upon that officer might be tacked on to those of the Superintendent of the Central Gaol, who could be granted a small additional remuneration on his present salary, and the post of Cantonment Magistrate as a separate appointment be abolished. No recommendations have been made to interfere with the Cantonment Magistracies of Poonamallee and St. Thomas's Mount.

THE Madras Mail thinks that the replies of the Right Hon. R. Bourke to the addresses presented to him are significant of an end having been put to "gosha" Government in the Southern presidency. "It was that method of Government which was primarily responsible for most of the grave miscarriages of justice in the last five years. The proper study of a man who is a Governor is man, far rather than poodles, flowers, or concertinas. It is a trite saying among all classes in Madras, that 'We don't want a very clever man for a Governor, but we do want a man who has ears to hear, and eyes to see, and a heart to sympathise with what goes on around him.' 'An admirable Crichton'—from his own point of view—who immures himself at Guindy, far, far away from the madding crowd of the people he is supposed to rule, comes within Lord Palmerston's definition of mud—since he is matter in the wrong place. There is no part of the British Empire where, as a rule, a Governor with a kind heart, good common sense, and a ripe knowledge of 'affairs' has so unruffled a time as is the lot of the Governor of Madras. The population is docile and unexact; it is also exceedingly interesting and loyal. It has a horror of 'gosha' Government; but it meets half way the Governor who with 'clean heart and a cheerful spirit,' lives in India, and for India during the whole course of his reign."

MR. HERBERT CHURCH, Traffic Manager of the Madras Railway Company, died of apoplexy on Dec. 17. He was originally employed on the Kilkenny and Waterford Railway, and came to India as Assistant Traffic Manager of the Madras Railway soon after the first sod of the line was cut. On the promotion of Mr. Fletcher to the post of Agent, Mr. Church became Traffic Manager. From that time up to his death, his whole energies were devoted to the service of the company. He was regarded as a very high authority on all railway matters. Exposure at the recent breach on the North-West line and anxiety to get matters straight for the Viceroy's journey across, the breach, and failure to take rest after hard work produced exhaustion of the brain. He was buried at the Cathedral Cemetery, military honours being accorded him, as he was a Major in the Madras Volunteer Guard.

BOMBAY.

THE result of the balloting for the Chairmanship of the Chamber of Commerce was that the Hon. Mr. F. Forbes Adam was re-elected for the fourth time.

MR. A. F. BEAUFORT, of the firm of Messrs. Lyon and Company, was re-elected Deputy Chairman of the Bombay Chamber of Commerce for the ensuing year.

THE REV. J. H. F. BLUNT, chaplain of Kirkee, is allowed furlough to Europe for twelve months on medical certificate.

MR. G. C. WHITWORTH is appointed Judicial Assistant to the Political Agent, Kattywar, vice Mr. H. F. Aston, promoted.

MR. J. A. CRAWFORD, Bombay Civil Service, has been appointed Junior Under-Secretary to the Government of India in the Foreign Department, vice Mr. G. S. Forbes, who acts for Mr. Cunningham, at present officiating as Secretary.

OF the 2,561 candidates who presented themselves for the Matriculation Examination, 526 have been declared to have passed. Amongst the latter are ten young ladies, viz., the Misses Alice Winifred Brady, Alice Fido, Hilda Moylan, Mary Mullen, Shirinbai Framjee Pathak and Lena Pilcher, from Bombay; the Misses Mabel Bailey, Lucy Stanley Wise, and Lydia Louisa Wiseman, from Poona; and Miss Edith Clay from Kurrachee. The Cawasjee Jehangir Latin scholarship has been awarded to Braz Lawrence De Silva; and the Bai Manekbai Byramjee Jeejeebhoy prize, for general knowledge, to Dinshaw Burjorjee Dubash.

OWING to the large number of mills now working in Bombay, all the leading Fire Insurance offices are opening agencies in Bombay. The directors of the Straits Fire have decided to open a branch here, and have entrusted the agency to the well-known business house of Messrs. B. and A. Hormarjee, who are also the agents of the Straits Marine Office. The capital of the Fire Office is two million dollars, and a large number of shares have been placed by Messrs. Hormarjee in Bombay, and by the Head Office in China and the Straits Settlements.

THE Sind Horse Show promises to be a very successful affair. The Governor of Bombay intends to avail himself of the opportunity to see the Sindhis, and will be present at the show. In addition to the prizes mentioned in the prospectus, a sum of about Rs. 3,000 has been subscribed by the nobility and gentry of the province. The additional prizes are very handsome, including two donations of Rs. 150 and one of Rs. 100. Prizes are offered for hack-carriages, hack horses, and camels, and also for butter, ghee, gram, and flour. In addition to the machines named in the prospectus the following are on their way from New York for exhibition at the show:—A Grant's double blast fan, a mill for grain and rice, a Clark's rice hucker, a Lion fodder cutter and crusher, a Daniel's No. 1 self-sharpening fodder cutter, a C. G. Level fodder cutter, and an improved Eagle Cotton Gin.

THE "temperance movement" in the Konkan has, says the Bombay Gazette, provoked a rejoinder from the local authorities perhaps as curious as the movement itself. A notice has been distributed in the Kolaba Collectorate, setting forth in the preamble that endeavours are being made to prevent by threats of violence and otherwise people from purchasing and drinking liquors who have the right to do so, and then warning the offenders that they are thereby rendering themselves liable to criminal prosecution. It is added for the comfort of lovers of liquor that "people have full liberty to drink spirits or not as they choose, and that whoever hinders them will be prosecuted criminally, and will be awarded the highest punishment laid down in the law." But does not this latter part of the caution look like going a little beyond the limits of the duty of executive authorities?

NORTH-WEST PROVINCES, OUDH, AND PUNJAB.

MR. E. W. PARKER has been ordered to Lahore on special duty with the Public Service Commission.

MR. JUSTICE TREMLETT, of the Chief Court, has applied for eight months' furlough from the end of January. It is not stated how the vacancy is to be filled. It depends on the state of Messrs. Barclay and Baden Powell's return to India. Both these gentlemen were offered the Financial Commissionership of the Punjab, but neither cared to accept it.

THE Punjab Times reports that a European, Mr. Coates, who was formerly employed on the Punjab Northern State Railway, was found dead in an out-house occupied by him in the compound of Lala Boota Mull, at Rawal Pindi. It is supposed the unfortunate man committed suicide by taking poison. He had been out of employment for a considerable period, and this, it is supposed, so preyed upon his mind as to induce him to put an end to his existence.

THE Lucknow paper says:—"The sad death of Mr. Dyer, of the 17th Lancers, on Wednesday evening, has created widespread sympathy with his widow, and deep regret that so promising a life should have been sacrificed through the merest accident. The deceased officer was out riding, and was not far from his own bungalow, when he must have fallen from his pony and dislocated his neck. The medical men seem to think that it is not improbable a heart affection may have led to the fall, and that, in coming in contact with the ground while in an unconscious state the neck was broken. A coolie found the body, but of course life was extinct."

A MILITARY tragedy is reported from Ranikhet. At the Depot there, some privates owed a grudge or had ill-feeling towards a Sergeant of the 100th Regiment, now stationed at Fyzabad, and they decided who should "do" for the Sergeant by dealing out a pack of cards, and to whomsoever the ace of spades was dealt that man was to become the Sergeant's executioner. The ace of spades was dealt to a young private of the Leicestershire Regiment, at present stationed at Lucknow, and this young fellow took up his rifle and deliberately shot the Sergeant dead. The murderer has been sentenced to death, but the sentence awaits the confirmation of the Commander-in-Chief.

THE death is reported of Lieutenant-Colonel James Salisbury Tait, District Superintendent of Police, Kangra, who died suddenly at Dharmasala on Thursday. Colonel Tait began his career in India as an Assistant Engineer on the Railway, and he was one of the famous garrison that held the house at Arrah during the Mutiny. For his distinguished services on this occasion Mr. Tait received a commission in the Army, and in 1861 he was appointed District Superintendent of Police in the Punjab. In 1875 he was appointed Assistant Inspector-General, Railway Police, which he held for some years. On return from furlough, in the beginning of 1885, he reverted to district work, serving as District Superintendent in Jullunder, Gurdaspur, and Kangra. He was appointed to the last-named district in November, 1885. The late Colonel Tait had arrived at Dharmasala from camp, on the night of the 14th ult. He was suffering from what seemed a slight indisposition, and came in on a dooli. The next afternoon he died; and a post mortem examination showed that death was caused by internal hemorrhage brought on during the journey. Colonel Tait had suffered from this complaint more or less during the hot weather.

AN EDUCATIONAL FAROE.

Under the above title the Lahore paper publishes a cruel analysis of the "Report of a Sub-Committee of the Oriental College Committee appointed to report on the reduction of the Budget and revision of the College Staff." The Sub-Committee, it should be noted, was composed of Dr. Center, the Civil Surgeon of Lahore, and four Native gentlemen. After some introductory remarks the paper goes on to say:—

"The Oriental College is an institution—it matters not for the present where or how founded—presided over since May, 1876, by Dr. Leitner, and purporting to give advanced instruction in Oriental Classics, General Knowledge and Science, through the Vernaculars, Hindu and Mahomedan Law, Engineering, Hindu and Mahomedan Medicine, and to be a Resort for Central Asian Students. A man whom such a programme of instruction in one small College did not satisfy would be like the Irishman who 'studied machine for two years, and studied learning for two years more.' But there have been institutions after the manner of village Penny Shows, all miracles on the flaunting advertisements outside, and all humbug within; and in this class we cannot but enrol the Oriental College. From the discoveries recorded by the Sub-Committee, as the result of their investigations, no other conclusion offers itself.

"To take matters in detail. We find, first of all, that until Dr. Leitner's time, the salary of the Superintendent was Rs. 400 per month; but in 1880 this was raised for Dr. Leitner to Rs. 500; and now, in 1886, the Sub-Committee have recommended that—as Dr. Leitner has notified his intention of leaving India soon, if not at once—Rs. 250 is ample remuneration for the class of work required. On the salary of the Superintendent, therefore, it would appear that Rs. 3,000 per annum was wasted. Next, with regard to the pretentious programme of the Oriental College, the Sub-Committee found that it was 'out of all proportion to the available means, teaching power, and appliances.' This the Sub-Committee deplore, as it has 'given rise to an erroneous impression that the institution is to a great extent a sham.' Why the Committee should regard that impression as 'erroneous,' their Report—and we have read it carefully—does not explain. Of course it is impossible that a College with a large staff of teachers should not teach something; but putting aside the irreducible minimum of education, which the worst-conducted establishment of the kind must convey, we consider the Oriental College, as hitherto, or at any rate latterly, conducted, the most palpable sham that investigation has ever exposed.

"In the matter of Hindu and Mahomedan Law, for instance, the Sub-Committee report:—'There are at present no classes in Hindu and Mahomedan Law.' Absolutely the only foundation for the inclusion of those erudite studies in the College curriculum was that Rs. 10 per mensem—about sixpence a day—were given to the Head Pandit and Head Maulvi to deliver lectures. These lectures are 'said' to have been delivered out of College hours; but [there is no record of them beyond the fact that, for some months, no lectures were given 'because students did not attend.' And this for a 'College of Hindu and Mahomedan Law!'] Naturally the Sub-Committee recommend that the Rs. 10 per mensem should be expended in this style no longer.

"Taking next the Engineering classes, the Sub-Committee considered they had no right to the title. They might be called 'Drawing' or 'Surveying' classes; but none of the appliances of an Engineering School were found. Babu Navina Chandra Rai, indeed, being a late Superintendent of the College himself, considered that they had a right to be called 'engineering classes, because instruction of a subordinate kind was given in estimating materials and construction generally. Such was the Engineering side of the College, costing in teachers' salaries Rs. 75 per mensem, in which the Sub-Committee have recommended a reduction of Rs. 25.

"As a Medical School, teaching two systems of medicine, the Sub-Committee found in visiting the College, 'that a person was teaching as Hakim who had no special qualification beyond being the brother of one of the other teachers.' This is lovely. Because John teaches French at a school, his brother James is foisted in as Professor of Physics! The students, it further appeared, were paid to attend these invaluable lectures by payments of Rs. 1 to Rs. 3 per month; and, taking into consideration the class of lectures to which they were expected to listen, we think they were shamefully underpaid. The lectures, however, only lasted about half-an-hour to an hour, so the students could not have come to much harm thereby. Of this part of the Oriental College the Sub-Committee not unnaturally recommended the immediate abolition.

"Of the Oriental College as a resort for Central Asian students, the Sub-Committee did not recommend the abolition; as the expenditure was slight, and it was an interesting curiosity. We have seldom heard a more naïve excuse for an educational institution; but in this case it was all that could honestly be said. The teacher received coolie's wages—Rs. 8 a month—and taught two pupils, one of whom was paid Rs. 5 a month for attending. He was a zemindar from Hanza, of the immature age of forty-five, and quite a promising pupil at that. 'He could read a little of a Persian Primer with difficulty.' The other pupil was also a zemindar from Ladak, and quite a youngster, only thirty-five years old. He could read a few pages of the Koran—'by rote!' The latter, we believe, was more regular in his attendance than the senior pupil, who recently took two years' holiday. Dr. Leitner ought to have impressed upon him the danger—at forty-five—of playing truant for two whole years of his school days, until at any rate he had learned to read.

"Lastly, we come to the regular work of the Oriental College—apart from the high-sounding excrescences of its title—and we find that the teachers only taught for three hours a day. In the College Department there were twenty-two Professors, with about six pupils apiece; as in the school department twenty-one teachers, with about five pupils each. A great part of their teaching—three hours altogether—was the same stuff as is taught in primary schools. Such is the Oriental College, with which Dr. Leitner's name has, since 1876, been united; but such it will, we trust, remain no longer. The Sub-Committee denounce its establishment as overgrown, its teaching as inadequate, and its programme as pretentious. We would describe it more briefly as a humbug. Rs. 14,740 were spent annually in payments to pupils for their kindness in assisting at the farce of education. Babu Navina Chandra Rai objected to the reduction of this expenditure, because 'the students, being taken up so many hours a day with their studies, would not find time to make their living by begging.' And this is education in 1886.

"Rs. 840 was paid for newspapers; and those bought were found to be sheets which had no appreciable sale—a fact which is less surprising when we are told that the journals taken in at the College were brought out 'at their own risk' by some of the teachers. The journals were apparently not the only things 'taken in' by the transaction. In this grant of Rs. 840 for newspapers the Sub-Committee recommended the reduction of Rs. 660. On the establishment were two copyists, at Rs. 20 per month, who were found, when the Sub-Committee visited the Institution, copying out lectures for the Professors and Translators. They got on at the tremendous speed of four or five pages a day, and the 'lectures' were found to be merely pages of a printed work on chemistry, with some marginal notes. The Sub-Committee not unnaturally considered that the lecturers and translators might as well write their own lectures and translations; and the posts of copyists might be abolished. Other retrenchments were suggested, and, with a graceful expression of regret that 'Dr. Leitner, whom they invited to assist them with his valuable information and advice, had been unable to come to their meetings,' the Sub-Committee conclude their Report on what appears to us the most ridiculous imposture in the way of collegiate education that we have met. Dr. Leitner, however, has retired with a very liberal pension, and the Oriental College, as he left it, we hope that we shall know no more."

THE wily grain-dealer of the Berars is, it appears, in cuteness not far behind the Yankee "who sold the nutmegs made of wood," for, according to a correspondent of the Jubbulpore paper, he mixes in every bag containing grain at least 10lbs. of black cotton soil. And this he does, not in the privacy of his backyard, but in open market, for black soil is purchased in the bazaar (we are not told the market rate) and put into the bags coram publico. As the correspondent adds, "England will shortly have enough of Indian soil for hot-houses to rear foreign plants, as better loam could not be got for love or money." If this be so it is only another proof of the old adage, "Tis an ill wind that blows no one any good."

THE ASIATIC QUARTERLY REVIEW.*

Our present and future Ministries will be strangely wanting in prevision if they do not see in China our natural ally against the common enemy of the two countries, Russia; and few subjects can be of greater importance to any one, who endeavours to forecast the early future in Asiatic politics, than the probable action of the mighty Celestial Empire. That the strength of China has been much underrated no one can doubt. Even the Chinese themselves seem, until recently, not to have fully realized it. And this fact gives great importance to the able article, by Marquis Ts'eng, on the "sleep and awakening" of China, which introduces the present number of this Review, and which was carefully analysed in the Times of Dec. 29th. China is, we are assured, almost in the enviable position of a Power which seeks nothing, and fears nothing. While it has learnt from past reverses to make ample provision against their recurrence, and, has, two years ago, shown the French that it cannot be assaulted with impunity, China "is not of opinion that it is only with blood that the stain of blood can be wiped out." And, though China will, at the expiration of the decennial period, "denounce" treaties which impose on her humiliating conditions, she will not disturb the peace of the East. "The world," sagely remarks the Marquis, "is not so near its end that she need hurry." We only hope that the British Statesmen of the day may have wisdom to see how greatly the true interests of their country are involved in the bringing about a close intimacy with a nation with whom we have so many interests in common.

All Indian readers will remember the puerile debates in the Commons, as to details (of which most of the speakers, in opening their lips, betrayed their utter ignorance) concerning Disraeli's wise proposal that the Queen should emphasize, by the assumption of an appropriate title, the transfer to Her immediate rule of the Government of Her Indian Dominions; and the Paper on "the Empress of India" recalls, opportunely enough in the Jubilee year, the placing under the direct management of the Crown of its most magnificent Dependency. How great has been the result of British rule in that grand country is well brought out in an article by Mr. J. Hutton, which, in referring to the suppression by us of such crimes as Thuggee, Dacoity, Suttee, Female infanticide (all which flourished ad lib. under Native rulers), does full justice to the noble efforts of the men by whom these reforms were effected. What "India for the Indians" meant not so long since, may well be pondered by Messrs. Cotton, Blunt, and Co.

One of the most remarkable among Indian Provinces, one which "is in almost every respect a sort of microcosm of India," is Gujarat; and to its Early History and Legends, Mr. Pedder has devoted a very interesting paper. The writer's long personal acquaintance with the Province leads him to speak in somewhat enthusiastic terms of its fertility and the industry of its inhabitants; though hot winds considered capable of igniting a funeral pyre (p. 138) and a capital, whose name (Ahmadabad) Aurangzeb proposed (p. 148) to change into "either Abode of Dust, Land of the Hot Wind, City of Sickness, or Town of Hell," may seem to the ordinary reader scarcely attractive peculiarities. Situate on the west of the Indian Peninsula, it was among the first parts approached by Europeans, and its great Ruler, Mahmud, seems to have been compelled to maintain a fleet fully adequate to the protection of his littoral, inasmuch as he defeated the Portuguese in a naval engagement in A.D. 1507. This King was, as a bigoted Moslem, vastly unpopular with his Hindu subjects, who represented him as living in constant dread of assassination, and accustoming himself to the use of poisons until his breath became so deadly that it was unsafe to approach him. He was, as Mr. Pedder reminds us, Butler's

"Prince of Cambay, whose daily food
Is asp, and basilisk, and toad."

Many of the legends interspersed in the narrative are very quaint; and the continuance (p. 147) to this hour of the ceremony which keeps alive the Rathor claim to Idar goes far to substantiate the truth of one at least of the most curious traditions.

Colonel Malleon follows up Mr. Keene's late article, in the October number of the National Review, on famous Indian women, by describing the career of the great Ahilya Bae, to which that of Tulsi Bae forms, as he shows, a striking contrast. Descending the page of history, we are introduced to one of the most remarkable of Indian women of later date in the person of the Sikandar Begum of Biopal, to whom Mr. Keene could devote but a few words. The lives of the three ladies are narrated by Colonel Malleon in a manner which will interest every reader.

Lord De Mauley's article on "The Wellesleys in India" refers to a period sufficiently remote from the present day to enable a tolerably impartial opinion to be formed as to the chief actors in its events; and the unanimity with which the transcendent merits of the two Wellesleys have been recognised is but a fitting tribute to their great services. The "Quid debeat, o Roma, Neronibus" cannot be too often repeated.

We come to a very different chapter in Indian history in Colonel Kincaid's interesting paper on the Indian Bourbons, one of the last relics, we apprehend, of those distinguished European adventurers who long ago made for themselves name and fame, not to say fortune, in the service of Indian Potentates. When we say that John Philip Bourbon entered the service of the Emperor Akbar (whose wife's sister he married) in 1560, and that the Colonel's narrative embraces the varied fortunes of his descendants up to the present day, readers will readily understand that they have a pleasant half-hour's reading before them; nor will they be disappointed. We hope that the stories of the families of other adventurers may be brought to light, and that they will have as painstaking and competent a historian as Colonel Kincaid.

Sir C. Wilson's paper on the Greeks in Asia shows forth the vast progress which the intellectual, pushing Greek is making in the Asiatic dominions of the Sultan of Râm. Some of these men belong to families who have never left Asia Minor, and many of whom maintained, during most trying times, their dialect and their feeling of nationality "in the subterranean villages of Cappadocia, or in the mountains of Pontus." But the majority have accustomed themselves to use of Turkish, written or printed in Greek characters; and Sir Charles mentions (p. 35) having seen a copy of the Psalms thus printed. While, however, the priests (themselves often wholly ignorant of Greek, which they recite in Divine Service without understanding) deserve all credit for sustaining the feeling of nationality on the part of their flocks, they seem not a little lax in other matters. "At Mamassun," we read, "the Christians and Moslems own a church in common, and hold in equal veneration a box of human bones, said by the one to be the bones of St. Mamas, by the others to be those of a celebrated Christian who adopted Islam as his religion." The article gives a noteworthy account of a progress which bids fair to make the money-lending Greeks the chief landholders in the Sultan's dominions, and the rate of which may be measured by the fact that whereas there were (p. 36), forty years ago, in Mysilene 60,000 Turks and 30,000 Greeks, the number of the former has dwindled to 20,000, while that of the latter now reaches 80,000.

We must pass over with a mere allusion Mr. Harrison Smith's well-designed, though, we fear, somewhat visionary, plan for the pacification of the Sudan, in order to devote a few words to the brief, but clear, essay on the Eastern question contributed by "Asiaticus." The writer points out that, eliminating Germany, (which "will not risk a man, or even pen a despatch, to hinder Russia's progress in the direction of Constantinople"), we have to consider three Powers besides ourselves as being, in the present state of affairs, more especially concerned in this question. Russia, the would-be robber, Turkey, the State to be robbed, and Austria, menaced, but too weak to act alone. He admits the enormous advantage which Russia enjoys in having all her strength directed by a single will, while our own force is manipulated by a succession of Ministries of antagonistic policy, themselves at the mercy of a majority of the most ignorant classes in the country. Incidentally pointing out the reality of a danger which has undoubtedly swayed Abdul Hamid's policy, that of his being kidnapped à la Battenberg—a feat far more easy of accomplishment than the uninitiated may suppose—"Asiaticus" warns us that we are no longer safe in playing a rôle d'effacement. "If," he says, "we now leave Austria without some proof of our fortitude and fixity of purpose, and Turkey without the definite assurance of our protection and support, we shall have thrown away the last chance we are ever likely to possess of coping with Russia on equal terms." Weighty words: may the policy of England be shaped accordingly!

What "Asiaticus" points out as a necessary policy for us in Europe—to adopt a definite course and to adhere to it—the events recorded in the Summary show to be not a whit less essential in Asia, where our relentless foe is ever at work. Both writers wholly ignore Persia, which, if a quantité négligeable, is one which it is certainly unwise wholly to neglect.

EDGAR ALLAN POE.*

We have read this book with great interest. The vagaries of an erratic genius usually contain the germs of instruction for the everyday mortals who have no pretension to genius, and no desire to be erratic. And it is not often the case that men of real ability are more communicative as to their inmost feelings than Edgar Allan Poe. "Poe, like Byron, and other brother bards, was," says the writer, "ready to bare the secrets of his heart of hearts to the veriest stranger" (p. 332).

Of gentle race, exquisitely sensitive, and possessing all the poet's abhorrence from the common place and the vulgar, which Charles Kingsley has so well depicted in his "Elsley Vavasour," Poe was doomed, throughout life, to struggle for his daily bread; and was, probably, never in a position to reveal the full extent of his ability. Like a far greater genius, Mozart, who often had to earn ten florins, wherewith to purchase the necessities of life, by composing the music for a song over his publisher's counter, Poe had to submit to performing the very drudgery of his profession, no matter how highly his innate abilities would have enabled, and, when an opportunity offered, did enable, him, to soar above it.

His life seems to have been of the most Bohemian character. Repeatedly (pp. 85, 115, &c.) we are told, by so careful and sympathetic a biographer as Mr. Ingram, that he is wholly lost to view, and, whether owing to any hereditary taint, to an ill-balanced mind, or to dissolute habits—of which last he does not, however, seem to have become the victim as a youth—he appears from an early date to have been afflicted with strange fits of despondency. Fancy a young man of twenty-four writing to a friend who had obtained for him a position on the staff of a newspaper:—"The situation is agreeable to me for many reasons, but, alas! it appears to me that nothing can give me pleasure or the slightest gratification!" This is hardly the language which one would expect of a young man who, having been at school in England, at school and college in America, and at the United States' well-known military academy at West Point, must, without having had the chance of becoming utterly blasé, have seen at least something of the world.

His ideas of (that great test of a man's character, his) relations with the opposite sex seem, too, to have been peculiar. We are by no means satisfied with the remarks about a poet's love. We really do not see why it should of necessity differ from that of another rational being, unless it be, indeed, on the somewhat violent assumption that a poet cannot be a rational being. True it is that Goethe, Byron, Shelley, had abnormal ideas on this delicate subject; but Shakespeare, greater than all the three combined, may fairly be quoted on the other side. Be this as it may, Poe can hardly, in this respect, claim admiration. He married, early in life (and after a previous love-affair) his cousin, then aged fourteen; and, to do him justice, he seems to have been a devoted husband. But his wife had not been dead eighteen months before he assures Mrs. Whitman ("Helen") that he loves (p. 372) "now—now, for the first and only time." The fair Helen, however, after a first brief acquiescence, refused to link her lot with an intemperate admirer. So Poe shortly afterwards wrote effusions, as nearly amatory as possible, to "Annie," and wound up by proposing to his first lady-love, who was now a widow!

That the literary career of Poe was one of drudgery has been already indicated. It is the common fate of a journalist that many of his best productions are read, liked, and—line trunks or enshrine musty bacon. And doubtless this has been the case with the subject of this memoir. But (putting aside his poems, which are known to all the world,) Poe appears to us to have especially shone in attack. Of his brilliancy in literary controversy we have in this volume many—perhaps too many—specimens. As a critic he seems to have had (pp. 124, 152,) exceptional powers—for instance, he forecast from the first few numbers the entire plot of Barnaby Rudge—though no reader of any sense would agree in his verdict (p. 283) that Tennyson is "the greatest" (poet) "who ever lived;" a criticism which comes the more oddly from a man who was, if not a ripe, at least a competent, classical scholar, and who was versed in the masterpieces of German, as well as of English, poetry. As a rule, however (save when he allowed himself to fall into that mutual-laudation system which renders contemporary American criticism worthless where American works are concerned), his pen was dipped deep in gall. Many a telling phrase has been, and many more will be, stolen from those of his literary onslaughts which have found their way into a reprint.

Mr. Ingram has, we think, done well in again bringing before the English public the life of a man, admittedly one of the most original whom the century has produced, and of whose interesting—nay, sensational—career no equally readable narrative has come before us.

CHARON: SERMONS FROM STYX.*

There are few lives in modern history which combine coarseness even brutality, in action, with what, for want of a better phrase, may be called cynical transcendentalism in theory, than that of the great Frederick. His works are, we may almost say, entombed in many tomes. But were they even disinterred, they would be "caviare to the general." The little dialogue of the dead which our author, in this brochure, gives to the public in a very racy translation, is one of the rare exceptions to the above remarks, and well deserves to be reproduced: the wordy combat between Louis the Fifteenth of France, and his canonized ancestor and predecessor, St. Louis, the ninth French monarch of the name, who is deputed to conduct his degenerate descendant into regions of an unsavoury character, being simply exquisite. Of the "Sermons," from the author's own pen, the reader will probably prefer the last, which contains a brief, but vivid, representation of Belgium in the days when, though bellringing had not been styled "campanology" and "triple-bob-majors," or "grandsire triples" were probably quite unknown in England, an accomplished bellringer was a person of no mean pretensions. The chief proficient in the melodious art, one Marcus Mujik, had but one worthy rival, his own wife. How jealousy was instilled into, or inflamed in, her breast, by the possession of a mysterious trinket handed to her by a Mephistophelian pedlar, who at the same time deprived her of the saintly image of the Archangel Michael, hitherto her cherished ornament (and, of course, a protection against all evil spirits), how her husband's unrivalled performance, on one occasion, roused her to a frenzy of jealous rage, and how the lofty steeple of St. Peter at Louvain was the scene of a terrible tragedy, we shall leave the reader to find out; and, once the tale begun, he or she will assuredly not lay down unfinished a narrative so admirably told. The motive of the entire little volume is excellent, and may well suggest not unprofitable reflections.

"Grace Bevan; or, the Mystery of Embden Vale," by J. R. (City of London Publishing Company), is the story of a woman who has for years to bear up against the incubus of a suspected name. From certain delicate touches, and from the insight given into the character of the heroine, the tale would seem to be penned by a woman's hand. Notwithstanding a vein of sadness which underlies the story it is told gracefully and feelingly, and the reader's interest is sustained to the last.

The Illustrated Naval and Military Magazine (W. H. Allen and Co.), is rich this month in pictures and letter-press. Admiral Warrington-Ingram gives very pleasant reminiscences of his "Wanderings in the Levant," and Major-General Mitford contributes the first instalment of what promises to be a very interesting series of "Notes of a Journey from Lahore to Liverpool via China, Japan, and America." Major Elliot continues his "National Record of the Victoria Cross," and Colonel Copinger tells a curious story of "A Duel in the North-West Provinces" in former days. The Editor's pen is mollified by the charitable associations of the season, and the sinners at the War Office have a respite for a time.

The Army and Navy Magazine (W. H. Allen and Co.) for January has, in addition to the translations which we have already noticed, and which are continued, two able papers—one on "The German Army Bill," by C. L'Estrange, and one on "Our Neglected Coast Defences." Mr. Rathbone Low contributes an interesting account of "Scotia: our Latest annexation;" Mr. M. J. Colquhoun continues his very readable serial, "Every Inch a Soldier," which is followed by a bright and well-written episode of the Secession War in America, by Horace Vachell; and "On Leave" is always a welcome resumé of the month's events pleasantly told.

The Prajahadhu says:—We hear that the Finance Committee will reduce the number of chaprasis and dustries of offices in general. It would be better to reduce the number of European officers whose duty is only to sign their names. If the Finance Committee really desire the welfare of India and wish to effect retrenchment, it will recommend economy in this direction.

EXAMINATION PAPERS TAMPERED WITH.—We have received from the Principal of the Thomason College, Roorkee, an incomprehensible document relating to the examination in which the papers, it will be remembered, were recently tampered with. It purports to give the partial results of the examination, and presents a series of initials, with a name in full here and there, together with formidable columns of figures. Of the names nine are European and two are Native, and the initials might belong to any nationality. As the Lahore candidates are not included, the results are inadequate, and as there is no proof that it was at Lahore that the papers were stolen—the probability, indeed, being the other way—the whole examination is unsatisfactory. The school, which has passed its candidates conspicuously well, will naturally be suspected as the pilferer of the papers. Meanwhile the publication of a muddled and fragmentary document like the one before us seems a waste of printer's ink.—Pioneer.

THE INDIAN NATIONAL CONGRESS.

THE great meeting which some alarmists in this country and in India considered to be a herald of danger to British rule in the East has been held, and the Empire remains undisturbed. The Times correspondent at Calcutta, who took considerable pains to prepare the public at home for the event, is reticent about much that would have been interesting to know. We should like, for instance, to have known whether Mr. H. Gladstone and Sir Roper Lethbridge addressed the Assembly, and what effect their respective views had upon their hearers. It is almost a shock to learn that Mr. Dadabhai Naoroji, late Liberal candidate for Holborn, delivered a speech which "was remarkable chiefly for its somewhat effusive loyalty of tone." We did not expect this of Naoroji. But the proverb does not always hold true that great men do not change their opinions with change of climate. An Indian gentleman in England had interviewed Mr. John Bright, and sent that eminent statesman's views as communicated to him to India; but, strange to say that Mr. Bright, while sympathising with all their aspirations, gave it as his opinion that the "representatives" of India were not yet far enough advanced for self-government. Good advice he gave them plentifully, but then, as it has been wittily and wisely said, "Good advice only is like trying to play the part of the Good Samaritan without going to the expense of the oil and the twopence." And this Mr. Bright has always done to perfection. No wonder that the Congress collapsed. Instead of breathings and threats against British misgovernment in India, the first resolution was one congratulating the Queen of England on her approaching Jubilee. Then we are told:—

The extension of the jury system and the separation of the executive from the judicial functions of the magistracy formed the subjects of another group of resolutions. The question of recruiting the Civil Service seems also to have been discussed, and the opinion was recorded that examinations should be held in both India and England, and that the limit of age should be raised to twenty-three. The subject of Native volunteers then came up, and it was resolved that, in view of the unsettled state of Europe and the immense assistance which the people of India, if duly prepared, could render to England in the event of serious complications, an earnest appeal should be made to the Government to authorise a system of volunteering for Natives. Finally it was resolved that copies of the resolutions should be sent to the Viceroy, with a request that he would forward them to the Secretary of State. The Congress then dispersed, after determining that next year's meeting should be held at Madras.

The labour of the mountain could not have produced a smaller mouse. The Viceroy has received a deputation which conveyed to him the Resolutions arrived at. With regard to the claim to have representative institutions his Excellency reminded them that the Home Government had admitted the desirability of re-examining the working of the Act of 1858, and that the matter might therefore be considered sub-judice. As to the longing which has lately come to the Bengali Babu to become a Volunteer Lord Dufferin explained, with all the kindness and courtesy of his nature, that the desire was a little premature. "He had no doubt that their desire to become Volunteers was prompted by the purest spirit of loyalty and patriotism, but when the Government came to consider the practical methods of giving effect to the movement it soon became apparent that the difficulties and disadvantages attending it altogether outnumbered its military and practical advantages. He could not therefore hold out any hope that the Home or the Indian Government would be induced to reconsider the decision arrived at." So for the present young Bengal cannot gratify his wish to wear an attractive uniform and carry a rifle—although the more chaste and befitting garb of a policeman can still be his if he wishes it.

But the Congress has dispersed for another year. In the meantime the agitators are making preparations to celebrate the Queen's Jubilee with all pomp and honour. If their agitator friends in England, who have tried to make capital out of them, will but take a hint from the bursting of this bubble agitation, we shall hear less of India's grievances and cries for Representative Institutions.

THE HIGH COURT IN CALCUTTA.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—In page 735 of the Allahabad Pioneer Mail of the 15th December, the quarrel between the Executive Government of Bengal and the Supreme Court of Justice is noticed under the title of "Lessons from the Lord Mayor."

The High Court have good reason for their indignation. Her Majesty's Judges know well that their duty is to administer the laws as they exist; they must not under the pretence of public policy twist the laws, and punish either rich or poor unless the laws give them authority to do so.

The Governor of Bengal and the Chief Magistrates of districts have reason to complain that they are not allowed to punish rich men, who wage petty war with their neighbours, and then employ their wealth in feeing counsel to save them from the consequences of their felonious wickedness.

The British Government exists in India for the purpose of preserving the peace. If we cannot control malefactors and men-slayers, the sooner we leave India the better; under our Riponian velvet gloves we must wear steel gauntlets.

The fault lies with the Legislative Council of India. Even before the Mutiny of 1857 the laws were so imperfect that, when the outbreak took place, we were obliged to disregard the laws, and exercise justice and firmness to the best of our ability. The British Government, which understood our difficulties, soon passed a law forgiving us all our illegal proceedings. Since the Mutiny the multitude of laws which have been manufactured and repealed and amended and tinkered have filled our subjects in India with astonishment and confusion; on the top of this mass lies an immense superstructure of Case law, good and bad.

English Magistrates may be excused for thinking in their inmost consciences that some of our Courts are Institutions for the protection of Vice.

Your obedient servant,

Jan. 5.

A CORRESPONDENT writes to the Lahore paper :—The description you give of M. Pachino tallies so exactly, making allowance for the lapse of time, with that of a Pachino whom I knew in Teheran, that I have no doubt but that they are one and the same. A Pole by birth, he was originally appointed to the St. Petersburg Foreign Office, as what the Russians call a jeune de Langues, or "sucking attaché." He was then, towards the beginning of 1861, appointed an attaché to the Russian Legation at Teheran. He was a capital linguist, and his ignorance of English was merely assumed. I knew him intimately, could swear to him anywhere; and have not the slightest doubt, when in India, been an agent of the Russian Foreign Office.

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

THE appointment of Brigadier-General H. C. Wilkinson, C.B., commanding the Presidency District of Bengal, to the Divisional Staff of the Army, temporarily, vice H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught, appointed Commander-in-Chief of Bombay, is gazetted.

H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT has made the following appointments on his Personal Staff, with effect from the 14th ult.:—Lieutenant-Colonel W. F. Cayave, 2nd Battalion Royal Sussex Regiment, to be Military Secretary, and to perform the duties of Interpreter in addition to his own, pending the appointment of a qualified Aide-de-Camp; Major O. C. Hannay, 2nd Battalion Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders, to be Aide-de-Camp; and Risaldar Major Dhowkul Sing, Sirdar Bahadar, 3rd Light Cavalry, to be Native Aide-de-Camp.

THE 2nd Regiment Hyderabad Contingent has been selected for service in Burma.

It is notified that probationers for the Indian Staff Corps appointed from the Royal Artillery and British or Native Infantry, to Native cavalry regiments will be reported on by officers commanding the regiments to which they are attached as to their fitness for service with cavalry, six months after joining their appointments. If then reported fit for permanent employment with cavalry, they will be attached for a period of four months, during the cold season, to a British cavalry regiment, for the purpose of undergoing a course of instruction in equitation, in the use of the carbine, sword and lance, and to complete, as far as possible, their cavalry training generally. Should there be no British cavalry regiment at the station where the officers are serving, they will be sent at their own expense to the nearest station where one is quartered. Full staff pay of their appointments will be passed, for a period not exceeding four months, on the condition that no extra expense will be thereby caused to the State.

WITH the sanction of the Secretary of State for India the appointment of Inspector of Army Telegraphy and Signalling with the Corps of Bengal Sappers and Miners has been abolished, and an appointment of Inspector of Army Signalling is created, on a staff salary, of Rs. 250 per mensem, pending the submission of a complete scheme modifying the present system of Army Signalling in India on the lines of the system in force in England.

A CLASS for instruction in Army Signalling will be formed at Kirkee on the 1st February.

THE military authorities in India have under consideration the introduction of ballooning into India; and in connection with this subject Lieutenant J. R. L. Macdonald, R.E., has been placed on special duty at Roorkee, for the purpose of preparing and submitting a scheme for its introduction into this country. While engaged on this duty, Lieutenant Macdonald will be attached to the Bengal Sappers and Miners.

COLONEL HOLMES, Divisional Judge Advocate, Sirhind and Lahore Circle, has been ordered to Burma; and Captain Bray, East Lancashire Regiment, officiates as Deputy Judge Advocate as a temporary measure.

UNDER instructions from Army Headquarters, a committee will assemble at Lahore early next month to consider the question of the proposed universal pattern sword for native officers of Infantry in Bengal.

COLONEL ADAMS, Acting Quartermaster-General of the Bombay Army, has been confirmed in the appointment.

THE list of officers in military employ who have had the option while on furlough of electing the "leave rules of the Indian Staff Corps," shows that out of 163 Bengal officers 122 accepted the new rules, of 66 Madras officers 45 accepted, and of 48 Bombay officers 36 accepted, giving a percentage of 26.71 who declined to accept them. Of a total of 277 who had the option 74 declined. If the Government of India had had its own way, the question of refusing would not have entered into the matter.

THE BLACK CONQUEST.

(By ERNEST WHITE, MADRAS.)

In the accompanying pages, the writer has ventured to embody a few observations made during the course of lengthened stay in what is still to so great an extent terra incognita, the Madras Mofussil, outside the towns. It is scarcely necessary to say that he does not aim at anything higher than the merely drawing attention to some salient features of life and public administration in the Province. Some of the questions referred to have been recently brought very conspicuously under the public notice. For his remarks on these, the writer, who is not unmindful of the thermometer and of the Indian acceptance of the rule hieme omnia bella conquesunt, craves the indulgence of the long-suffering reader.

I.

THE BUNNIAH'S REIGN.

The Great Corporal's famous gibe at the British nation was once curiously matched by a remark to the present writer by an Indian sage, in the course of certain confabulations on the existing order of things. The sage rejoiced in the dignified ease of a village Munsifship, in which capacity it is to be hoped he continues to adorn the councils of his native heath. He had certainly never heard of his great prototype; and his utterances, made in the midst of an admiring circle from his particular stone, under the wide-spreading village banyan tree, had the force of originality combined with authority. After much sapient observation on the manners of an administration of which his memory extended back to the last Pindaree raid into the lowlands of the Kistna, he delivered himself of the conclusion that there had been three Probutvans: the first being that of the Brahmins; the second that of the Kshetryas; while the dispensation for the time was the Government of the Bunniah. The speaker himself was a Kamma, or Sudra ryot, the last of the four great classes.

The sentiment of this indigenous epigrammatist is one, it is believed, which is very commonly shared by the Aryan cousins of the Western governing class, and which takes the form of something more than a suspicion among many of that class themselves. The country, it can never be forgotten, was once, in a literal sense, governed by the shopkeepers; and if the palmy days of profits in pepper, kinkob, and "country goods," and "cute bargains in turkey-red cloth, have gone their way, there still linger many of the traditions and something of the spirit which characterised the successful financial operations of the departed Nabobs. This, however, it is conceived, was not the sense in which the writer's ancient friend intended to sum up the merits of the Pax Britannica. His meaning and special reference to a fact which was, doubtless, a private grievance, and which was at all times evident in a numerous element in his auditory: the daily increasing preponderance in the village community of the Bunniah.

The Bunniah has for ages been the proverbial repository of the mingled hate, fear, and ridicule of his countrymen. In the Hindoo drama he holds something of the place which the respectable British tradesman found in the comedies of Wycherly and Congreve. It is the Bunniah who, submitting to a small allowance of dall, and no ghee, with many inward rejoicings at his fair spouse's frugal mind, is hurt in his finest feelings when he returns home unexpectedly, and finds the lady of his heart regaling another Lovelace with barfi and other expensive delicacies of which he has never been permitted to partake himself. The conclave on the Karnam's Pial (the village club-window), viewing his present special ascendancy in the law courts, is never tired of relating how—when Justice was administered by the bygone Nyayadipita the Bunniah, in those courts, was a continual subject of derision. When the Bunniah's wife breaks the leg of the dhobi's donkey, trespassing into her garden, and the dhobi retaliates by assaulting the lady, thereby depriving the Bunniah of a possible heir, appeal is made to the seat of justice; and the discriminating judge, not so hampered by precedents as his unworthy successors, nicely balances the measure of damages in each case, by decreeing that the dhobi shall provide the Bunniah with a son, and that the Bunniah shall in the meantime perform the duties of the dhobi's injured donkey. The decisions of the Hindoo judge abound in wisdom and subtlety. When the Bunniah digs up his partners capital from the hole under the tamarind tree which is the banker for both, and the partner on making a reference to the hole finds the joint stock missing, the embezzling Bunniah promptly accuses his partner of having made away with the money. The dispenser of truth is appealed to; and the court issues a commission to examine the tamarind tree. The Bunniah, who would have done credit to a Fifth Avenue board of directors, is, however, equal to the occasion. The night previous to the inquiry he deposits his old father in the hollow of the tree, having "coached" him as carefully as any vakeel does a modern witness. The evidence of the tamarind tree, in these circumstances, given in an awe-inspiring voice, goes to establish the spotless innocence of the Bunniah and the dishonesty of his partner. But the judge is unconvinced; and a cross-examination, conducted by the insertion of some burning grass into the tree, elicits the truth and ends the life of the Bunniah's parent; and the Bunniah retires, as he still sometimes does, lamenting a heavy bill of costs.

Well may the laudatores temporis acti, assembled on the Karnam's pial, feel dissatisfied with the unworthy manner in which judicial functions are discharged in a degenerate age by the unreasoning foreigner.

The Bunniah, in bygone days, generally had a bad time. When a Ragojee Bhonsla, or an Ameer Sing, with a few score of enterprising spirits, came spurring across the burning plains of the Deccan, intent upon loot, the summons to each ill-fated little mud fort was that of the English king to the long-resisting French city; a summons which each quaking dealer in rice, chilis, and usury knew too well, and which was as readily (if less heroically) complied with as in the case of Calais. The six principal citizens to be surrendered as the people's ransom with halters round their necks, were promptly unearthed from among ghee pots and bags of jaggeri, and sent forth to assuage the wrath of the invader amidst the plaudits and a good deal of propulsion from their enthusiastic fellow-citizens. No tearful Queen was there to avert the fate which awaited them. The long-boarded pagodas, only less dear than life, had to be produced, and transferred to the saddle-bags of the freebooter; and when the Bunniah returned, the departing yells of the conqueror expressed scarcely more satisfaction than that felt by the vanquished. If the Bunniah is now exempt from the terror of the periodical Mahrat'a or Moslem raid, there are occasions in his lot which still recall the memories of his fathers. As long as there remains a handful of grain in the bin, or a cow unsold or brass pot unpawned, the ryot will be content to render up half of a scanty meal to the insatiable greed of the village usurer; but when these have followed the old plough and the last yard of land, a day comes when Rama Reddi will collect his kinsmen, and the Bunniah, rudely aroused from dreams of avarice by the light of many flaring torches, will be chased at midnight from his plundered and gutted bazar.

II.

THE BUNNIAH'S BONDSMAN.

The Duke of Wellington attributed his Indian victories to his exertions in procuring rice and bullocks. The fate of the Indian administration may be said to be bound up with that of the Bunniah and the ryot. These classes make up the great working hive. All else are drones. The parasitical Brahman priesthood, living on the superstitions of the people; the ci-devant Mussulman nobility, impecunious and complacently indifferent to the future; the semi-educated official class, swarming in the public service and the law courts—these lend nothing to the strength, security, and advancement of the administration. The agricultural and the trading classes merit the chief place in the consideration of their rulers. The condition of these classes transcends in importance every political and educational fad. The indulgence of schemes of theoretical Government would not be possible for one instant in the absence of what renders Government at all a possibility. In a country without mineral resources, manufactures or foreign commerce, agriculture and internal trade are the sole support of Government. The ryot furnishes the land revenue, without which the machinery of the Government could not hold together for an instant; and the Bunniah keeps the former in existence. The ryot cultivates the land; the Bunniah buys the ryot's produce in good years, gives him credit in bad, keeps him alive, and lives on him; and in addition retails the Government's salt, spirits, and opium, and collects its stamp duties.

The Bunniah, to substitute the Indian for the Grecian fable, is the elephant on which rests the burden of the State, while the ryot, as the struggling tortoise beneath, upbears the whole.

After a hundred years of British rule in the country, it is curious that the question should be asked, as it has often of late been asked, whether the Tenth Avatar, the Avatar of the Iron Horse, has effected any material improvement in the condition of the ryot? But whatever the answer to the question may be, there can be only one reply so far as regards the ryot's immemorial parasite. To the Bunniah the rule of the British has been an unmixed benefit. Every circumstance points to the conclusion, difficult though it is to believe, that the country, under one of the most enlightened Governments of the civilised world, is the one in which there has been the greatest impoverishment of the peasantry. In no other country perhaps do the same circumstances exist. A dense population solely dependent on the produce of the land, living a hand-to-mouth existence, extracting a bare subsistence from the soil in seasons of prosperity, and swept away by myriads in a single season of distress. This wretched people once clung around the great holdings of former times, and as kinsmen and dependents as well as tenants, their prosperity was bound up with their feudal chief. But the great hereditary houses have everywhere been broken up. Placed under a new and inflexible land tenure, heavily and unrelentingly taxed, harried by the harpies of the Government, the people are withal patient, industrious, and frugal beyond belief, submissive as driven cattle. Toiling with his family from morn to night and from year's end to year's end, the ryot obtains as much coarse food as is sufficient to preserve life. With this, a hovel to live in, and a few yards of cotton cloth, he is content; if perchance he can save enough to buy some copper cooking utensils and his wife and children a few trinkets, he accounts himself fortunate. This creature has not yet attained to the conception of whiskey, Boycotting, and shot-guns as moral agents. A Parnell who "stumped" the Northern Circars would everywhere meet with a stupid and unresponsive amazement. We have to do with a people whose moral development has not advanced beyond the stage of Nature worship, and towards whom the western educational genius, absorbed in the task of supplying the public offices with learned dufterbunds and errand men familiar with the ethics of Spencer, has not found time to turn his attention. To these people, the small-pox, the Revenue Inspector and the Sirkar are all impersonations of offended Dirga. The moon still flies from the menaces of his outraged guru, whose wife's susceptibilities Chandra has been trifling with. And all things must go on as they are until the end of the Kaliyugam.

It is from the miseries of such a people, infested with the clinging plague of the petty native executive, and crushed by the relentless extortions necessary to the support of an unapproachable, unsympathetic Government, that the Bunniah is bred. If any proof is wanted of the wretchedness of the one it is to be found in the inflation of the other. A pauper peasantry, whose existence is one prolonged struggle against starvation and death, is the hunting-ground of the village usurer. He draws the ryot into his clutches; pays his kist, doles out his daily food, robs him of his last pice, helps to keep him in the proper state of ignorance, filth, and superstition necessary for the complacent drawing of big salaries; holds down the yoke on the galled neck and forces the starved beast forward, but for which the cumbersome machine dragging at its heels would move no further.

"The Sirkar holds the hands of the ryot while the Bunniah robs him."

Has it ever been sought to classify the several million deaths of the last famine? Were those wretched bodies, found in the grey dawn after the night of Lord Ripon's reception, huddled together on the steps of the Mysore's Assembly Rooms, turned over to see of what sort they were? That terrible time which robbed the Government of crores of revenue and millions of toiling lives, costs the Government's ally, the Bunniah, many a patient victim, fallen at last from the vampire grasp. But the calamity in the long run enriched him. He bore nothing of the burden. It was the ill-fated agricultural population which filled the ditches, and furnished the jackals and vultures with their carnival. The parasites swarmed from the backs of the stricken beasts.

The Indian Mutiny swept from the face of the earth in six months abuses which sixty years would have left surviving. It is strange that a calamity in comparison to which the Mutiny sinks into insignificance, should have left no lasting lesson. It is curious to witness the spectacle of a Government emerged from such a cataclysm, pursuing its even course, undisturbed by a single thought of the necessity of altering the condition of the unhappy wretches whom one short season of drought herded into eternity in such monstrous numbers.

To one Collector intent on digging a canal we still have twenty administrators absorbed in fostering into existence discontented—or to be contented—Brahmanical aspirants for public plunder.

RELIGIOUS disturbances in India propagate themselves (says the Pioneer) by what scientists know as "alternate generation." There are certain low orders of animal life which in one generation are creeping things of quaint outline, who produce offspring flying, swimming, or stationary, and utterly unlike themselves. Of these the children are again creeping things; and their children once more fly, swim, or survey as much of nature as floats past their fixed abiding-place. So, at Delhi, religious riots produce a plentiful crop of trials; which produce more religious antipathies; which produce more riots; and so on ad infinitum, unless British administration, more watchful than Nature, intervenes. Two typical trials are lately recorded by our Delhi correspondent; one that of a Hindu charged with the foul murder of a Mahomedan boy and the other of a Mahomedan charged as a ringleader in sacrilege. Both accused were supported by squadrons of witnesses, counsel, and sympathisers of their own creed; both were acquitted; both are local heroes, whose escape from their religious enemies has been celebrated by feasts, rejoicings, and prayers. The outcome of this is easy to foretell. The Hindu and Mahomedan community of Delhi are at this moment rejoicing unanimously that the law has failed to bring home to anyone the perpetration of the two worst crimes that marked the Delhi riots. They are in fact rejoicing that those crimes were committed—with impunity. From congratulation of one crime to the commission of another is only the narrow step that separates cause and effect.

THE CALCUTTA ST. ANDREW'S DINNER.—The Bengalee says:—"The Scotchmen of Calcutta observed the pious memory of their patron-saint as became Scotchmen, with a sumptuous dinner at the Town Hall, to which they invited themselves and their friends. The St. Andrew's Dinner was, by all accounts, a great success. But in the goodly array of guests, public and private, we do not find the name of a single Indian gentleman, Hindoo, Mahomedan, or Parsee. The celebration, no doubt, was in its origin religious; but, barring the toast to the pious memory of St. Andrew, we might read the speeches through and through and find nothing to remind us that the guests were met to assist in a semi-religious celebration. It is the meeting of the representatives of the different communities in social gatherings and at the dinner-table that contributes more than anything else to soften asperities to which such graceful allusion was made by Mr. Yule in his speech.

THE total number of persons in Bengal assessed for the License Tax in the year 1885-6 was 75,396, but of this number 5,215 were exempted on the grounds of objection, and 299 on appeal, leaving the total number of persons to pay the tax at 69,882. The assesses showed an increase of 352 during the year, and as the total population of Bengal is estimated at 66½ millions, one person in every 951 paid the tax, and the average rate of taxation was one rupee to every 56 persons. The total net collection for the year amounted to Rs. 14,29,120, which is slightly less than in the previous year, and is ascribed to the general depression of trade and to the revision of a number of original assessments.

NAVAL AND MILITARY GAZETTE.

EVERY SATURDAY. PRICE SIXPENCE.

The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" has acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent course of its staff of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A series of Illustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" freely opens its correspondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for interchange of opinion is afforded, such as is offered by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supplements."

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" circulates largely throughout India and the Colonies. It is supplied direct to the Army and Marine bureaux of the French, Russian, and other Governments, and it is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Services, especially of the German, French, and American Armies, who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.

OPINIONS.

The Calcutta Review for October reached us a day or two ago, and a glance at its contents shows that the number more than sustains the reputation which this old and favourite publication is again achieving. The Review is rapidly regaining the position which it ... there is no fear of the Indian Review, or the Asiatic Quarterly rivalling it in public favour. — Statesman, October, 1886.

... The best service which I ever rendered in India, or, indeed, for India, was the establishment, single-handed, of the Calcutta Review, which has done far more for Indian literature than anything I have written under my own name. — J. W. KAYE, Athenæum Club, June 23, 1872.

The Calcutta Review has given us valuable articles on the army. Some from the pen of Sir Henry Lawrence, who wrote with the spirit of prophecy, of the coming storm of which he was one of the noblest victims. — Address of the C-in-C. at the U.S. Inst. of India.

... The Calcutta Review has not only throughout its career reflected the highest honour on its public-spirited promoters and its well-known distinguished contributors, but has done much to help forward the reconstruction of our system of governing India. — Westminster Review.

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

A MAGAZINE THAT GIVES EXPRESSION
TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF THE PEOPLE OF
INDIA.

There are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing MONTHLY (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterized by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is especially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE

COUGHS, COLDS, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE—Dr. J. C. BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff) DISCOVERED A REMEDY to denote which he coined the word CHLORODYNE. Dr. Browne is the SOLE INVENTOR, and, as the composition of Chlorodyne cannot possibly be discovered by Analysis (organic substances defying elimination), and since the formula has never been published, it is evident that any statement to the effect that a compound is identical with Dr. Browne's Chlorodyne must be false. This claim is necessary, as many persons have purchased by false representations.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE—Vice Chancellor Sir W. PAGE WOOD stated publicly in Court that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was UNDOUBTEDLY the INVENTOR OF CHLORODYNE, that the whole story of the defendant Freeman was deliberately untrue, and he regretted to say it had been sworn to. See The Times, July 15th, 1864.

DIARRHŒA, DYSENTERY. GENERAL BOARD OF HEALTH, London, REPORT that it ACTS as a CHARM, and is generally sufficient. Dr. GIBBON, Army Medical Staff, Calcutta, states: "A DOSE COMPLETELY CURED ME OF DIARRHŒA."

From SYMES & CO., Pharmacological Chemists, Simla. Jan. 5, 1880.

DEAR SIR,—We congratulate you upon the widespread reputation this justly-esteemed medicine has earned for itself all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars, and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances ad infinitum of the extraordinary efficacy of DR. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE in Diarrhœa and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia, the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Choleraic Diarrhœa, and even in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power.

We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's, from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist to prescribe and patient alike.—We are, Sir, faithfully yours, SYMES & CO., Members of the Pharm. Society of Great Britain, His Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is the TRUE PALLIATIVE in NEURALGIA, GOUT, CANCER, TOOTHACHE, RHEUMATISM.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a liquid medicine which assuages PAIN of EVERY KIND, affords a calm, refreshing sleep WITHOUT HEAD-ACHE, and INVIGORATES the nervous system when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts short all attacks of EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC, PALPITATION, HYSTERIA.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.—The IMMENSE SALE of this REMEDY has given rise to many UNSCRUPULOUS IMITATIONS. Be careful to observe Trade Mark. Of all Chemists. 1s. 1d., 2s. 6d., and 4s. 6d.

General Intelligence.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 31st December; from Allahabad and Madras to the 29th December; and from Calcutta to the 28th December.

PLEASURE has been more prevalent than business in Calcutta, and the Viceroy has entertained a large party of distinguished visitors from England at Government House, visiting with them the Calcutta Races, which have hitherto been very successful. The Levée at Government House attracted the largest attendance of any Levée except that held by the present Viceroy on the first occasion after his assuming office, and the drawing-room also was very well attended.

At the meeting of the Bengal Legislative Council, the Hon. Mr. Macaulay introduced the Bill to amend the present Calcutta Port Trust Act, the object being to enable the Chamber of Commerce and the Trades' Association to nominate their own representatives in that body.

THE HON. F. FORBES ADAM has been re-elected Chairman of the Bombay Chamber of Commerce for the fourth time.

MR. ELLIOTT is appointed, with the title of Finance Commissioner, to complete the work of the Finance Committee. He will be assisted by Colonel Filgate and Mr. Bliss, while Mr. Jacob will continue to act as secretary.

MR. JUSTICE TREMLETT, of the Lahore Chief Court, has applied for eight months' furlough from the end of January.

A LETTER from Madras makes mention of Dr. Leitner's visit to the Presidency, in the interests, it is said, of the Working Institute. But the Madrassis, we are told, are not yet convinced of the merits of that far-famed institution.

THE death is reported of Colonel C. Garstin, senior Commissioner of Kumaon.

MAJOR H. WYLIE, C.S.I., is posted as Political Agent to Bhopowar.

FURTHER surrenders are reported from Burma, and Sir Frederick Roberts considers the pacification of the country to be proceeding satisfactorily. No fighting is anticipated at Bhamo or Wunthoo, but the ruby mines column will probably meet with resistance.

THE Commander-in-Chief has had an interview with the Burmese archbishop, who assured General Roberts that the priests were ready to assist him in every way.

SIR FREDERICK ROBERTS will probably leave Upper Burma in the middle of January. Most of the troops, it is hoped, will leave in March.

THE Public Service Commission has concluded the examination of witnesses at Lahore, and is now holding sittings at Allahabad. A series of new issues have been framed which will greatly facilitate the business of the Commission.

THE second National Congress met at Calcutta on Monday. It was attended by nearly three hundred delegates. Dr. Rajendra Mitra welcomed the delegates to the capital. The Hon. Dadabhai Naoroji, who was elected president, delivered an inaugural address. In his speech he said the Congress had met to represent to their rulers their political rights; it was not a social congress. He then indicated the work before the delegates.

THE proceedings of the Congress have been conducted in private. Resolutions have been passed congratulating the Queen-Empress on the approaching Jubilee; pressing on the Government the introduction of representative institutions and drawing attention again to the reform and expansion of Legislative Councils. A Committee was appointed on the subject of the Public Service Commission.

THESE resolutions were followed up by others dealing with trial by jury, the separation of executive and judicial functions, and the formation of volunteers corps composed Natives.

THE DUKE AND DUCHESS OF CONNAUGHT returned to Poona for Christmas after spending a few days in Bombay. Their Royal Highnesses visited the famous caves of Karli from Poona.

COLONEL H. C. E. WARD, Minister of Bhopal, will visit Calcutta immediately after Christmas by the Viceroy's request.

COLONEL MARSHALL, of the Punjab Commission, has been appointed Secretary and adviser of the Nizam on the recommendation of the Viceroy.

FOURTEEN out of a large number of dacoits awaiting trial at Kyoupyaw in the Bassein district have made their escape from gaol.

A GUARD named Lane, after attempting to shoot Mr. Brammal, the district traffic superintendent of the East Indian Railway, and Mr. Simmons, the head clerk at Toondla, committed suicide in his own quarters.

Notes of the Week.

THE meeting of the Indian National League at Calcutta, which was supposed to be a demonstration in favour of Home Rule for India, has been succeeded by a meeting called together for making arrangements to celebrate the Queen's Jubilee. The 16th and 17th of February are to be observed as public holidays, and money is being subscribed in the several Presidencies for the erection of some permanent memorial of the occasion. There will be no gathering of Native Princes at Calcutta, but each will celebrate the event at his own capital.

OF course a great deal of money will be spent on fireworks, for illuminations and fireworks are much delighted in by the Natives of the East. The Maharajah of Cashmore has, however, shown his fellow-potentates a good example. He intends to commemorate the year by building a bridge across the river which flows past his capital, Jummoo. If other Princes will order the execution of works of public utility, Her Majesty's Jubilee year will be a memorable one in India.

WHAT is the truth about the concession of the Ruby Mines of Upper Burma? One day we are told that they have been made over to Messrs. Streeter and Co.—another day we hear that a French firm claims them. To-day we are informed by the Times telegram that the report that they have been disposed of by the Government is incorrect. Action is not to be taken until the rights of the Natives in the mining district have been ascertained. This is considerate on the part of the English authorities, but it is still uncertain whether the mines are yet in English possession. It is not so easy to give away what has yet to be got hold of.

ENGLAND is said to be indebted to India for some of the grandest of philosophical thoughts intended to benefit mankind, but sometimes India borrows an idea or two from England. Some years ago there was a scandal exposed in London of a young gentleman who, anxious for a military career but unable to pass the qualifying examination, got a more learned friend to personate him and so obtained his commission. In India the other day a somewhat similar experiment was tried, and nearly succeeded. Babu Lal Tirwari, desirous of honourable official employment, got himself personated at the Middle Class examination held at Cawnpore by a lad who succeeded in passing, and the Babu thereby became qualified for a Naib Tahsildarship. The fraud was, however, discovered, and Babu Lal was tried and sentenced to eighteen months imprisonment. But the judgment was quashed on appeal, as the Babu, not having applied for his certificate, the higher Court held that the fraudulent act had not been completed.

BABU LAL was so far luckier than his English exemplar, who came to grief and was disgraced. But the Babu and his friends probably look upon the escapade more as a misfortune than a fault. The dishonour and dishonesty of the transaction do not trouble them. In all our elaborate educational schemes intended for the elevation and improvement of the intelligent Hindu we appear to have failed in imbuing him with the idea that a little honesty is advantageous in the commencement of the official career which we have encouraged him to aspire to. But he does not consider it dishonest or dishonourable to get early hold of examination papers if he can do so. This is looked upon in India as cleverness. The examination papers for entrance to the Thomason Civil Engineering College at Roorkee last month were surreptitiously obtained by certain candidates, and the authorities have failed to discover how this was done. The blame is put upon that much maligned beast of burden—the Post Office.

THE Bangabasi, a Bengali newspaper published in Calcutta, says, "On behalf of the 200 millions of Indian people we beg to say that they will not feel satisfied so long as there exists a separate Civil Service in England. With such a distinction our rulers will never be able to satisfy us. You may have the competitive examination, or the nomination system, or both, but so long as the real Civil Service examination is held in England, reserved for English youths, the people of India will by no means feel satisfied." This is the voice of the Babu who is always complaining, not the voice of the people of India. To hold the examinations in India for the higher appointments in the Civil Service would be a great mistake. The hope of good Government even in Native hands lies in the advantages to be derived by the latter from contact with European ways and ideas. If the British Government would do more to encourage the youth of India who aspire to office to visit England the benefit to India would be great and lasting.

THE story that the murder of a sergeant of the 100th Regiment stationed at Ranikhet was decided by lot in drawing cards amongst certain privates of the Corps who had a grudge against him is one which savours more of romance than of reality. But it is stated as a fact that the players decided who should "do" for the sergeant by the fall of the ace of spades, which card was dealt to a young private of the Leicestershire regiment, who thereupon took up his rifle and deliberately shot the sergeant dead. Shocking, however, as this occurrence was, it does not justify the recommendation urged by several writers that English soldiers in India should not be entrusted with balled ammunition in quarters, as "thereby the means of crime were at every man's disposal." If a soldier cannot be allowed the custody of a cartridge he ought not to be allowed the custody of a bayonet; in fact, he ought not to be trusted at all. But it would hardly do to cast such a slur upon the whole army because one man chooses to commit murder.

A CORRESPONDENT, writing from Hoti Murdan, says of a troublesome little people who have almost slipped out of remembrance lately:—"The Boners are all for giving in to the Government; the only man of importance who still holds out being Nasar Snah (Nurazai). They are in great trouble about the rifles they have to return as part of their punishment. They say they only have twelve, and that God alone knows where the others, stolen within the past two years, have gone to." It is a pity that as matters stand at present, the memory of the pious Boners cannot be refreshed by a few troops.

INDIA.

CALCUTTA, JAN. 16.

A preliminary meeting for the purpose of arranging for the celebration of the Queen's Jubilee was held here last Tuesday, and was largely attended by delegates from the various public bodies. The Lieutenant-Governor presided. It was resolved:—

"That the city be illuminated on the evening of February 16th;

"That the Viceroy be invited to receive loyal addresses from deputations of the Corporation and the public associations;

"That a committee be appointed to arrange for the celebration and to collect subscriptions;

"That the Sheriff be requested to convene a public meeting; and

"That the Viceroy be asked to order that the 16th and 17th of February shall be observed as public holidays."

In accordance with these resolutions, the Sheriff of Calcutta has convened a public meeting for next Wednesday. The British Indian Association, which represents the landed interests of Lower Bengal, has appointed a committee to raise funds for the purpose of commemorating the Jubilee in a manner worthy of the occasion by some permanent memorial, the nature of which will be decided upon hereafter. The Bombay Corporation has resolved to devote 80,000 rupees to the erection of some permanent memorial and 10,000 to illuminations. The Rangoon Municipality has called a public meeting for Tuesday to consider the subject. It may be confidently expected that other Indian cities as well as the Native Princes will not be backward in celebrating the occasion. The Maharajah of Cashmere is making great preparations for its celebration, and has announced his intention of erecting a bridge across the Tawi River at Jummoo as a permanent memorial. It is believed that there will be no gathering of Native Princes at Calcutta, but that each will celebrate the occasion at his own capital.

The Bengal Committee of the Public Service Commission has commenced its sittings in Calcutta. Nearly all the witnesses examined so far have been Bengalees. Most of them expressed disapproval of the present system of recruiting the statutory Civil Service, and suggested that competitive examinations should be held in India as well as in England. There seems to be some difference of opinion among them as to whether candidates selected in India should be required to complete their education in England. It is to be hoped that this week the Committee will have the advantage of hearing the evidence of some English and Mahomedan witnesses. The main body of the Commission has proceeded to Bombay, and will be engaged there for about a fortnight.

The Coroner of Madras, under orders from the Government, has opened a public inquiry into the causes of the recent disastrous fire. The result will be awaited with some anxiety as, notwithstanding the Police Commissioner's report to the contrary, there appears to be still some suspicion of incendiarism; and the Rev. Dr. Miller, Principal of the Christian College, has published an account of something he saw just before the commencement of the panic which would certainly seem to point in that direction. Meanwhile, to allay the general impatience, the Government has published the evidence on which the Commissioner of Police arrived at the conclusion that the fire was of accidental origin, and has conveyed its thanks to the members of the police force for their exertions on the occasion. When the inquiry is finished the Government will undertake legislation for the purpose of controlling the construction of temporary buildings in places of public resort. A committee has been appointed to receive subscriptions and administer relief.

The newly-constituted Legislative Council for the North-Western Provinces and Oude has been formally opened by the Lieutenant Governor. In a speech delivered on the occasion Sir A. Lyall adverted to the advantages of having a local council to attend to the interests and wants of the province instead of being dependent upon a body meeting in Calcutta or Simla. It would also, he said, be a relief to the Supreme Court. In short, the new arrangement would be more convenient and satisfactory to all parties. He anticipated much advantage to the Government and the country from the establishment of local councils.

Preliminary steps are being taken in Calcutta for the purpose of commemorating the merits and great public services of Sir A. R. Thompson, who will retire from the Lieutenant-Governorship of Bengal in March.

Much interest is felt in this country in the question of the selection of the Mercantile Member of the India Council in succession to the late Mr. Bullen Smith. There is a general feeling that no appointment would be more popular with the Native as well as the Anglo-Indian community than that of Mr. George Yule, a gentleman who has long been recognised as one of the leading merchants of this city, and who is now about to retire from India.

BURMA.

MANDALAY, JAN. 16.

Much attention has been attracted here by a statement appearing in some of the English newspapers received by this mail to the effect that a widespread conspiracy exists at Bhamo, in which large numbers of the Chinese are implicated. This report appears to be altogether erroneous. Sir C. Bernard states that the civil authorities have received no information of the existence of such a conspiracy. The military authorities also say that they know nothing of it. While at Bhamo General Roberts made very careful inquiries on the subject, and he believes that there is no foundation for the report.

There is, however, reason to believe that the Chinese authorities across the frontier are not friendly to us. Much discontent undoubtedly exists among the Chinese at Bhamo, owing to the action of Captain Adamson, Deputy Commissioner, in imposing fines on the Chinese community, and imprisoning their head man. These ill-judged proceedings are much to be deprecated, and may seriously check the revival of trade and increase our frontier difficulties. The Rangoon Times, of January 19, says that similar action on Captain Adamson's part in February, 1886, while Deputy Commissioner of Mandalay, so incensed the Chinese that they announced their intention of withdrawing from all demonstrations of welcome to the Viceroy, although previously they had been the most enthusiastic of all the foreign bodies in Mandalay.

It is reported from the Ruby mines that the Tsawbwa of Mainlung having refused to submit, a column was despatched to Mainlung on the 9th, and was fired on when approaching the town, which was stockaded. The place was carried with only one casualty, but the enemy suffered some loss. It is apparently expected that resistance will be offered to the Woontho expedition.

The negotiations for the surrender of Hla-Oo continue actively. The Buddhist Archbishop recently sent one of his principal assistants to urge him to surrender. Yesterday this monk, accompanied by Hla-Oo's sister and two of his officers, had an interview with General Roberts, who was very conciliatory.

The 6th Brigade, commanded by General Low, has established thirty-four military posts in the Minbu district, and has sent out eleven flying columns, which are traversing the country.

General Roberts will return to India about March 6, General Arbuthnot taking his place. The relieving of the troops will begin as soon after March 1 as possible. All the cavalry except the Madras Lancers will be brought back, and also all the regiments of General Prendergast's original force still remaining in the province, and some of the regiments sent there early in last year.

THE Government of the Straits Settlements are in difficulties in the matter of a satisfactory survey, and recently applied to the Government of India for the services of an experienced officer to assist them. As no officer on the active list could be spared, the Government offered the work to Mr. J. B. N. Hennessey, late Deputy Surveyor-General, who since his retirement continues to reside in India. Mr. Hennessey, however, has declined the service, and so the Straits Government remain in the position which destiny and geography have assigned to them.

Mr. CORQUHOUN, who as an energetic traveller and a special correspondent of the Times won a world-wide reputation, seems to have been shabbily treated in Burma. When he was induced to return to service in Burma he was gazetted as Deputy Commissioner, Fourth Grade, because, as the Government of India say in the last blue-book, they could not offer him anything less. This was on the 7th of February. But on the 1st of August he was re-gazetted, and from that date, although he had drawn his pay ever since February, this makes him fourth on the list of Deputy Commissioners, Fourth Grade, instead of first as he had been, and a number of men were gazetted on the same date, any of whom can be placed over his head at any time. He had "exceptional treatment" for exceptional services, and as he has been doing good work ever since he returned to Burma, it is impossible to see why he has been degraded. The Englishman puts it down to an error in the Secretariat. In any case the error should be put right.

THE military authorities of India have been known to forage for mules in Italy, and there seems to be no good reason that they should not go to Iceland for ponies. These animals would apparently be an excellent substitute for mules for our mountain batteries. The island produces more than she can dispose of, so much so that they have often to be killed for want of fodder to sustain them during the long winter months. The ponies are as sure-footed as mules, and can easily traverse thirty miles a day without fatigue, carrying a load on their back. They are cheap, being procurable at £5 or £6 each, are as easily fed as asses, and would be invaluable in mountainous warfare. At any rate there is no reason why a batch of fifty should not be purchased and sent out to India for trial in the north; and should the climate prove suitable for them, larger purchases might be made. The French military authorities have ordered them to be tried in the French Army.

ANGLO-INDIAN PRESS.

THE BENGAL-NAGPUR RAILWAY.

(Englishman.)

Two almost directly contradictory statements have recently been made regarding the Bengal-Nagpur Railway. On the one hand it is said that the question has been revived, that a banking syndicate has offered to provide a capital of three or four millions, and that the only matter to be settled is whether the guarantee shall be 3½ or 4 per cent. The other story is that the project is exactly where Lord Kimberley left it on his departure from office, and that it is being stultified by the efforts of the Strachey clique in Council, bent as eagerly as ever on the adoption of the metre gauge. The ground of opposition has been shifted from time to time, and now the Government of India's scheme has been cut down to ridiculously small dimensions. It is proposed that a single line should be carried only as far as Bilaspur, which is tantamount to reducing the project to one-fifth of its original proportions; and the pretext of the obstructionists is that they are compelled to consider the financial position of the country. The latter account of the fate of the project, it is to be feared, is the more probable one, and it behoves the Indian Chambers of Commerce to make vigorous and combined effort to break down the perverse opposition that is being offered to this vastly important scheme by a Council clique. The urgent necessity for the line has been admitted on all hands, and it is only trifling with the highest interests of India to revive at this late hour the question of the gauges which has surely wrought mischief enough already, and which has long since been finally settled as far as commercial opinion in India is concerned.

It is sad to think that the Council is practically turning away capital from India, and that, but for its eccentric and indefensible tactics, an enterprise which is fraught with advantage not only to Bombay and Bengal, but to a large portion of Upper India would by this time have been well on its way to completion. After all, the present project is one of comparatively modest dimensions, and when we consider the important purposes it would serve it is impossible not to attach grave responsibility to the obstructionists in or out of the Secretary of State's Council who have so long delayed its realisation. The length of the proposed railway from Bilaspur to Sitarampur is 365 miles, and the first estimate for the broad gauge line was a little under three hundred lakhs. This is at the rate of about Rs. 80,000 a mile, and it is believed to be, if anything, within the mark. Supposing, however, that the cost of construction did not exceed this estimate, it would require a traffic of about Rs. 130 per mile weekly to yield a profit of four per cent., and this is assuming that the working expenses did not exceed the low rate of 50 per cent. Of course it is only possible to form a rough idea of the financial success of the scheme, but there has been a distinct tendency to under-estimate the special interests by which the project is surrounded. It is easy for General Strachey to point to the engineering difficulties of the country—the inequalities of surface and the number of rivers that have to be crossed—and to hint that the estimate is too low; and if the traffic figures of some other lines are then taken as a standard of comparison, considerable doubt may be thrown on the earning power of the undertaking. But while Rs. 130 per mile of weekly earnings would be counted a good return on many lines, there is excellent reason for believing that the traffic on the Bengal Nagpur would largely exceed this amount.

The line traverses the country where the enormous pilgrim traffic from all parts of India converges on its way to Puri, and a large and permanent traffic would thus at once be secured. Again, the railway would take the place of the great feeder of the province of Orissa, which is at present entirely without railway communication. In view of this fact alone, the Government might be expected to exert itself to the utmost to bring about the early completion of the work. True, twenty years have elapsed since the famine of 1865-66 brought into such painful prominence the isolated position of Orissa, but although we can look back on a long period of prosperity, there is no guarantee against the recurrence of such a disaster, and, were a famine to take place next year, we should be in no better position to battle with it than before. This view of the matter has been already stated with no little force. "The expenditure of a million sterling extra in the capital account of a railway, or of £40,000 a-year in a guarantee, is but a bagatelle as compared with what must be spent in coping with another such calamity. Yet we haggle and delay, as if the phenomena of nature could be stayed by a party vote, or a starving population relieved by means of foolscap." It is not, however, with the responsibility of Government in the matter that we are now concerned, but with the prospects of the railway as a source of profit. We have directed attention to two local conditions which would go far to secure the prosperity of the concern, and we would only add that with a new outlet to the seaboard at Vizagapatam, the line being continued to that point from Raipur, a vast accession of traffic would be the result. Indeed, the more the prospects of this scheme are considered the more unac-countable is the conduct of those who obstruct it. The Bengal Chamber of Commerce is, to some extent, to blame for its apathy in regard to this vastly important undertaking, but it could render a valuable service at present by strengthening the hands of the Government of India, and by giving expression to the opinion of the mercantile community on this side of India in regard to the proceedings by which the execution of the project has been so long delayed.

COOLIE EMIGRATION TO THE COLONIES.

(Statesman.)

A recent issue of the Calcutta Gazette contains the usual annual resolution on the Report on Coolie Emigration to the Colonies during the last nine months of 1885. The previous report was for the whole financial year 1884-85, and the shorter period which the present report covers arises from its having been decided that for the future the reports shall deal with the calendar, instead of the financial, year. In making a comparison of results, therefore, only the corresponding nine months of the previous year have been taken into consideration. The present year was marked by a considerable falling off in the demand for Indian labourers. "Of ten colonies which sent requisitions in 1884-85, seven ceased to do so altogether during the year under report, namely, Jamaica, St. Lucia, Grenada, Natal, Mauritius, Surinam, and Guadeloupe; while of the three remaining, Demerara, Trinidad, and Fiji, the two former indented for a smaller number. On the whole, requisitions were received for 6,430 coolies, against 18,639 in 1884-85, and an average of 14,734 in the four preceding years." The cause of this decrease is not explained, but it is understood to be the declining state of the sugar industry, in which the emigrants are mainly employed. In Jamaica, moreover, the introduction of a representative legislature into the island has shown the hostility of the people to the Government practice of importing foreign labour. On the other hand, Fiji demands an increased supply of coolie labour. The proximity of these islands to Australia and New Zealand is probably an attraction also to the Indian labourer. "The great colonies beyond the Indian Ocean are somewhat nearer to this country than are the other settlements to which coolies are taken; ordinary wages in that region are very high, and there is an amount of reclaimable land which suggests the possibility of emigration at some future time on a scale large enough to give appreciable relief to the over-populated districts of Bengal." As to the districts which supply the emigrants, "the largest number were found, as usual, in the 24-Pergunnahs (945), but Patna (918) and Shahabad (830) approximated very closely in this respect to the metropolitan district. Benares (626), Gya (612), and Allahabad (489) come next in order; and no other district registered as many as 400 emigrants. The North-Western Provinces formerly supplied the largest number of emigrants, but during the last two years Bengal has headed the list, and in the year under report 4,692 emigrants were recruited in Bengal, while the North-Western Provinces only supplied 2,223. Dr. Grant attributes the change in great measure to the continued dearth of food in Bengal and Behar, but some allowance should also be made for the natural tendency in the emigration agencies to work the nearer and more accessible districts first, to save the expense of going to a greater distance to secure the labour required. In a year which so few coolies were needed it could hardly have been necessary to recruit as actively as formerly in the North-West.

Four thousand two hundred and thirty-three emigrants re-embarked from the colonies for India during the nine months under review, bringing with them the sum of Rs. 4,67,665, an average of Rs. 111 per head; "5,884 emigrants having embarked during the year, and 4,077 (excluding deaths on the voyage) having returned, the net result of the nine months' operations was that emigration from the port of Calcutta reduced the population of India by only 1,807. Those returning from Demerara brought most money, their savings averaging Rs. 254 each, while the Mauritius emigrants returned with only Rs. 42 each, an amount far below the average of the last few years." The aggregate amount brought from the French colony of Guadeloupe in 1884-85 was Rs. 31,332, or an average of Rs. 78 for each returning emigrant. "An important and burdensome part of the Protector's duties is the tracing of heirs to the estates of emigrants dying in the colonies." Of a total amount of Rs. 16,377, Rs. 6,137 is reported to have been paid, or to be in course of payment, but for a residue of Rs. 1,590 no heirs can be found, as the resolution concludes, no doubt justly, from the difficulties placed in the way of these investigations by the custom amongst the emigrants of giving false particulars of names and residence on leaving India.

THE CAMPAIGN IN BURMA.

(Times of India.)

The campaign in Burma does not present any occasion for the display of military genius on the battlefield, but it subjects officers and men to a severe trial of their physical stamina and their moral qualities of courage, fortitude, alertness, and patience.

By the arrival of the Commander-in-Chief at Bhamo the tour of inspection may be considered complete. There may be alterations in the details of the campaign to suit the varying circumstances of the opposition offered by the rebels, but the general plan is formed and is now being carried out. With the drying up of the ground after the rains, and the setting in of cooler weather, the resumption of military operations has been possible. These operations cannot be easily followed by the casual reader to whom Upper Burma is more or less of an unknown land. The forces have been divided into so many detached portions that the situation has become not a little complicated. Mandalay and Mingyan are the two chief centres from which the forces derive support. But the headquarters of the different brigades are altered from time to time to suit circumstances, and thus it is necessary to be in close communication with the different centres in order to understand the situation at any particular moment. The rebels or dacoits against whom the operations are now being undertaken may be divided into three classes, those who possess some political significance from their being arrayed under the banner of some Pretender or Prince of the Royal House, those are professional dacoits and are led by some notorious leader as Hla-Oo or Boh Shway, and those who are tempted to take to marauding as a change from their ordinary vocation, and in the hope of gaining advantage from the unsettled state of the country. The political pretenders are of far less consequence than the regular dacoit bands, for the former do not really command any homogeneous forces, while the latter are united by a common feeling, and are under leaders who have proved their competence, and, besides, from their knowledge of the country, they are able to move about and ravage at their pleasure. But, whatever the name of the band or leader, all patriotic motive must be denied to them. They are united for the purpose of marauding, and they do not inflict injury so much upon the foreign invader as upon the people of their own blood. The work of the British forces in Burma is, therefore, the protection of the people from pillage, outrage, and murder, by their own kith and kin. If writers, like Mr. John Bright, were to spare some time to the examination of the real circumstances of the country they would be less prone to reflect upon the conduct of men who, not less philanthropic than themselves, are exposed to disease and danger, and are called on to sacrifice their lives for the establishment of order where anarchy reigns. The real philanthropist is rather he who risks something for the cause of humanity than he who stays at home to cavil.

The two leaders of dacoits against whom the chief operations are directed are Boh Shway and Hla-Oo. In one of the exceedingly interesting and valuable series of letters now being published in our Allahabad contemporary from their special correspondent in Upper Burma the recent movements of Boh Shway are chronicled. This leader who flourished under King Theebaw seems to have experienced a check on the arrival of the British, but, on finding that the forces occupying the country were so feeble, he, along with Oktama, a discontented phoongyee, or priest, retained possession of a large district to the west of the Irrawaddy. He was driven back by detachments that were sent against him, and in one of the encounters Lieutenant Phayre was killed. As the country had subsequently to be abandoned on account of its being very unhealthy during the rains, Boh Shway resumed his old habits. And some of his men have become leaders of bands further north all along the Irrawaddy. General Low is proceeding to take measures to effect the capture of this leader. He is endeavouring to surround him by a number of small detachments, for only in this way can a capture be effected, for, with his knowledge of the country in which it is most difficult to conduct military operations, he will easily defy pursuit. A somewhat similar process is being followed with regard to Hla-Oo, who was very nearly captured by Major Symons and his mounted infantry the other day. The success of the operations in this direction is such that our correspondent telegraphed a day or two ago that the followers of this notorious dacoit were surrendering. Hla-Oo terrorises over the country to the west and north of Mandalay. He is a bold desperado, and seems to have much influence, for he is understood to have had close communication with the Tinedah Mingyee, about whom we used to hear so much at the time of the capture of Mandalay last year. The Yemethen district, which lies in the south, close to the frontier of Lower Burma, is reported to be nearly clear of dacoits, thanks to the energy of General Lockhart. But it must be recognised that this pacification may be only temporary. The detachments of military and police have scoured the country freely, and have found no opposition, but this is far from showing that the dacoits have abandoned their evil courses. The bands have scattered, some of those composing them going into Lower Burma to produce mischief there, and some drifting north, where there is still a very unsettled condition of affairs, but some have merely pretended to resume the occupation of tillers of the soil, and are ready to break out immediately the strong hand of military coercion is removed. Herein consists the chief difficulty of the situation. No doubt Boh Shway and Hla-Oo will be captured in time, and their hands made harmless, and the expedition will reach and take possession of the Ruby Mines; but the establishment of complete order will not thereby be assured. The Burmese take to marauding naturally, and though they may give way before the exhibition of military force, they will break out again when this military force is removed. And removed it must be to a considerable extent at the close of the cold season.

PROSPECTS IN BURMA.

(Bombay Gazette.)

The political and military situation in Upper Burma is improving. The Buddhist "archbishop" and a number of his priests have had an interview with Sir Frederick Roberts, and our correspondent at Mandalay, who is in a position to be well informed, states that they promised to co-operate in the restoration to order. They also testified to the considerable measure of success already attained in that direction by the Commander-in-Chief himself. This admission of improvement in the state of the country is perhaps even more satisfactory than the assurance that the influence of the Buddhist ecclesiastics would be exercised on the side of the new Government. The archbishop, who is a man advanced in years, is a man of good sense and moderation, and his personal authority over many thousands of Buddhist priests is indisputable. He early recognised that the fall of King Theebaw was in a large measure due to shortcomings on the part of that monarch himself, and as he said to our correspondent in Burma last January, he was to be regretted as a child might be who had died after every effort had been made to save him, but that the grief should not be beyond measure. A spiritual chief so rational and so capable of taking a common-sense view of great political changes cannot find any difficulty in co-operating usefully with a general commanding thirty thousand men with unknown strength in reserve. With regard to the military aspect of affairs in the new province, General Roberts appears to have succeeded in "rushing" the principal bodies of the insurgents such as General Prendergast rushed Theebaw's army and Theebaw himself a twelvemonth ago. Many dacoit leaders and followers have thrown up the sponge with Burmese facility, and sought for pardon. Most of the others appear to have fled or to have taken to their legitimate occupations. The confidence with which it is announced that the Commander-in-Chief considers his work in Burma done, and that he will return to India in a fortnight, and that a considerable proportion of the troops will be sent back in March, seems justified by the results obtained, but we must not forget that precisely the same announcements were made with equal confidence rather less than a year ago when King Theebaw had been put on board a steamer and sent to Madras and his army was disbanded. General Prendergast returned to England, and it was announced that the larger portion of the small and gallant army which had captured Mandalay would be sent back to India in February or March, a single brigade being all that was then deemed necessary to maintain order in the newly-acquired territory. We know that this prospect was not realised. The troops were not sent back, and it was found necessary to send them reinforcements, which has raised the army employed in that country to 30,000 men, while General Roberts himself had to take the command. When the hot weather returns and the Burmese dacoit regains a little self-possession we must be prepared for a new dacoity and a good deal of disturbance. The energy of Government may be again taxed, and a strong military force will be required to support the police, of which we hear so many complaints whether that body be composed of Burmese or of Natives of India. However, sufficient for the day is the evil thereof. For the present there is a respite from the cares and cost of a big military expedition to keep Burmese hornets from stinging.

BENGAL.

THE Indian Daily News advocates the establishment of a flour-mill in Calcutta, which, it says, ought to prove a splendid paying concern.

THE Finance Committee being broken up, Mr. Cunningham resumes his seat in the Calcutta High Court, displacing Mr. Agnew, who proceeds to Rangoon as Recorder.

SIR STEUART BAXLEY leaves England in the last week in February, accompanied by Mr. Edgar.

THE Englishman understands that it is practically settled that the Postal Department will remain in Calcutta next hot season, and it may be taken for granted that this decides the fate of the Telegraph Department.

A SENSATIONAL event recently occurred in connection with the collection of the Income-tax in Calcutta. A gentleman who had paid the tax so long ago as April was lately proceeded against, and his carriages and horses were actually attached before the mistake was discovered. An action is likely to be the result. Damages are laid at Rs. 10,000.

OF the total number of 197 Covenanted Civil Servants serving under the Government of Bengal twenty are at present absent on furlough, and four furloughs have lately been granted, which leaves fifteen at present available. As three more officers are returning in January and four in March, there are expected to be twenty-two furloughs available from the 1st of April next.

THE officers of the Government of India at Simla are under the impression that the past season at Simla was an anxious and busy one, owing to the complications in Burma and other causes. The Hindoo Patriot, however, appears to entertain a different view, for it remarks that "arduous labours await his Excellency after his long and protracted holiday of nine months."

THE writer of "Echoes of the Week" in the Englishman's Saturday Evening Journal writes:—I was always under the impression that London policemen were the best tempered class of men in the civilised world. They must cede the palm to certain members of the Viceregal staff who devoted themselves to the delicate task of keeping the mob in broadcloth within the prescribed bounds. Their risible faculties, as well as their patience, were often sorely tried. One gentleman, for instance, stopped on reaching the presence, and deliberately donned a by no means immaculate pair of gloves, casting triumphant glances the while in all directions. Another individual kept his hands in his pockets while passing the Viceroy, and substituted a familiar nod for the profound salutation which should have acknowledged the personified majesty of our Indian Empire.

MADRAS.

THE MAHARANI OF MYSORE has given birth to a daughter. This is the fourth child she has borne to the Maharajah, who is only twenty-three years old.

THE MADRAS GOVERNMENT have agreed with the local Board of Revenue that there seems to be no necessity to continue the system of making advances of ploughs to ryots, as so few have taken advantage of the proffered aid. They further agree with the Board that the practice of holding ploughing matches should be abandoned, and in their place travelling shows be adopted.

A COUNCIL of all the Roman Catholic Bishops of Southern India takes place at Bangalore on January 25. The establishment of the Roman Catholic Hierarchy in India will be proclaimed from that date. Indian bishops will derive their titles from their Indian dioceses, and not from places outside India. About ten bishops are expected to be present at the Council, including Doctor Colgan, Archbishop-elect of Madras. The Council will be presided over by M. Agliardi, Archbishop of Caesarea, the Pope's delegate to India.

UPON the recommendation of the Acting Agent of the Madras Railway Mr. Louis Moss has been appointed by the Board of Directors in England to be traffic manager of the company in India, in place of the lamented Mr. Herbert Church. Mr. Moss entered the company's service in November, 1868, on £350 per annum, as assistant traffic manager, and was promoted to £450 in 1871. In January, 1872, he was made deputy traffic manager on £650 per annum, being promoted to £750 per annum in January, 1874, from which time he has had no increase of salary. His place as deputy traffic manager has been filled by Mr. Darke, the senior assistant traffic manager.

THE new Governor of Madras is winning golden opinions from all sorts and conditions of men. Especially is his expressed readiness to grant interviews to any Native who may wish to see him on any matter of public interest commended in the Madras papers. They want a man as Governor, they say, who takes an interest in the men he governs, not an enthusiast on flowers or concertinas.

HAPPY Madras! The "Hills" Exodus, so far as that Presidency is concerned, is not to be interfered with. So at least we are authoritatively informed from local sources, on the ground that Government House at Ootacamund is being repaired at a cost of 10,000 rupees. If the tenth part of a lakh of rupees were all that stands between Government and hard labour in the plains, the security would be a poor one. Nor is the case strengthened by the assertion, however true, that it would be a tremendous ordeal for a man of Mr. Bourke's age to remain "in the city of dust, heat, bad smells, and prickly heat throughout the whole year." Reformers are, as a rule, superbly insensible to suffering—in others; and to conclude a declaration that the Hills Exodus will not be stopped, with an appeal ad misericordiam for Mr. Bourke's sake, looks like unnecessary foreboding.

BOMBAY.

MR. OTTO STEINER's appointment as Russian Consular Agent at Aden has been recognised.

SIR ROGER LETHBRIDGE, M.P., has left Bombay for Calcutta.

MR. E. M. PRATT, who has been appointed a member of the Bombay Civil Service, reported his arrival on the 21st instant, and has been placed under the orders of the Collector of Belgaum.

IN supersession of previous orders the Rev. C. F. H. Johnston, Acting Archdeacon, on being relieved of the Chaplaincy of Poona, will take over charge of Kirkee from the Rev. J. H. T. Blunt.

LORD AND LADY ROSEBURY, Lord Fife, and Mr. Fergusson, M.P., leave Bombay by the mail of the 11th February. The Duke and Duchess of Manchester and Lady Alice Montague are passengers by the mail of the 4th March.

At a meeting of the Bombay Municipal Corporation on the 6th January Captain Morland will move and Sir Jamsetjee Jejeebhoy, Bart., will second a resolution expressive of the sense of the Corporation in the loss it sustained by the death of Mr. A. W. Forde, Consulting Engineer to the Municipality.

THE following telegram from the British Ambassador at Constantinople, dated 22nd instant, has been published by the local Government: "Calcutta and Bombay both subjected to reglementary Quarantine, and this applies to Ottoman of Red Sea and Persian Gulf."

THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL IN COUNCIL has received with satisfaction the information that the Raja of Sunth in the Rewa Kantha Agency of the Bombay Presidency, has resolved to abolish all transit dues in his State with effect from the 1st November, 1887.

A NUMBER of articles from the wreck of the s.s. Zuari have been washed ashore on the island of Oorun. Two boats and a davit have also been picked up by the Water Police. Arrangements are being made for the raising of the vessel, and it is expected that she will be afloat shortly. An elderly Hindoo has presented a petition to the Commissioner of Police, wherein he mentions that he was a passenger by the Zuari, and that he has lost a tinpot worth two annas which he requests should be returned to him if found.

PRINCE FREDERICK LEOPOLD OF PRUSSIA arrived in Bombay on the 23rd inst. from Agra and Jeypore. Before leaving Agra his Highness expressed his regret at not seeing the Maharajah of Dhulepore, who was prevented by illness from visiting Agra. The club committee did everything in their power to make the Prince's stay at Agra comfortable, and the arrangements are said to have been perfect.

THE season reports for the past week for the Bombay Presidency show that slight rain fell in parts of the Deccan and Southern Mahratta country. The standing crops have been slightly damaged by rain and blight in parts of Ahmednuggur and Bijapur, but are in good condition elsewhere. Fever prevails in parts of twelve, cattle-disease in parts of ten, and small-pox in parts of two districts.

NORTH-WEST PROVINCES, OUDH, AND PUNJAB.

COLONEL WALLACE, Consulting Engineer, has inspected 120 miles of the Sindh-Sagar State Railway, from the crossing of the Chenab to Bhakkur, and has recommended its opening from the 1st January, 1887.

THE Delhi Gazette publishes an account of a shocking tragedy which occurred at Toondla on Christmas-eve. A number of people were in the Co-operative Stores, when a guard named Line entered and fired a pistol at Mr. Brammal, district traffic superintendent, and Mr. Simmons, head clerk on the railway, wounding the former in the left wrist. The would-be murderer then proceeded to his own quarters and committed suicide by blowing out his brains with a gun.

THE death-rate in some of the Punjab towns is very high at the present time. The official returns for the week ending the 20th ultimo show that at Peshawur it was 104 per mille of population, at Palwal 74, at Umritsur 69, at Sonapat 64, and Batala 60 per thousand of population. The excessive death-rate at Peshawur was due to the prevalence of small-pox. We notice that there were two deaths from hydrophobia in the province during the week.

A RESOLUTION issued by the Punjab Government shows that the area irrigated in the Punjab last year was 1,787,567 against 1,614,288 acres in the previous year. The capital invested by Government amounted at the close of the year to Rs. 5,52,99,891, to which must be added Rs. 1,18,67,230 contributed by Native States to the Sirhind Canal. The total money invested was therefore Rs. 6,71,67,121, of which Rs. 32,63,317 have been expended on a famine relief and insurance work—the Swat River Canal. The capital expenditure during the year was Rs. 22,60,863. The loss after paying all charges and the interest on the Protective and Productive Works amounted to Rs. 4,96,234, in which is included a credit of Rs. 44,922 on account of adjustments of previous year's accounts. If this sum is not taken into account the total loss for the year is Rs. 5,41,156.

NATIVE PRESS.

THE PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION.

If Lord Dufferin really appointed this Commission for our good he ought to have said so clearly. None but diplomats can understand the diplomatic language of the resolution which he has issued. The Bengali newspapers, being unable to understand the object of the Commission, expressed apprehensions. Lord Dufferin felt mortified at this, but the people of India have sufficient reasons to distrust his lordship's Government. It is a matter for surprise and regret that Lord Dufferin has not been able to understand the cause of our distrust of the Commission.

From the result we shall be able to ascertain what good motives he had for appointing it.—The Home Irookash.

Up to this time Lord Dufferin has not done anything in this country which indicates high-mindedness. He has lost the respect of the public by duplicity; from what the people have seen of his work they cannot feel satisfied. If Lord Dufferin appointed the Civil Service Commission for the welfare of the Natives, why were not half of the members of the Commission appointed from among the Natives and why were not the people given the power to elect members?—The Pratihar.

NATIVE DEMANDS.—Why is the task of governing India becoming day by day more difficult? Because no change has been effected in the administrative system. If Lord Dufferin understood that in order to preserve the British rule and enhance the dignity of the British nation, he ought to adopt a policy suitable for the present time, and come forward to satisfy the just aspirations of the people, he would find the difficulty removed to a considerable extent. If the Natives are largely appointed to the public service, if the election system is introduced into the Legislative Councils, and if the members so elected are vested with due privileges for fifty years to come, there will be no difficulty in governing India according to the wishes of the people. If his lordship is a true statesman he will undertake this task.—Sangbad Pravakar.

RACIAL JEALOUSY IN INDIA.—For the resolution of the National Mahomedan Association of Calcutta to take no part in the proceedings of the second National Congress, the Mahratta thinks Anglo-Indian writers are mainly to blame, but not solely—the Mahomedans of Calcutta ought to have seen that it was their interest to join the National Congress. They have, indeed, tried, in their letter to the Congress, to show that in declining to take part in the proceedings of the Congress they were not influenced by anything like race jealousy. But we do not think that this would prevent anyone from going a little deeper into the motives of the Association. For it is impossible to see otherwise how an association that professes to deal with political questions should fail to see that it is not mere confidence in Government that will secure us a full measure of liberal treatment at their hands. Even English statesmen have now begun to perceive that there is some truth in the charges, as remarked recently by Professor Wordsworth, that "despite its profession, and perhaps its wishes, the Government of India is often the organ of class interests and helpless to resist the pressure that surrounds it." It is, therefore, strange to find a political association playing into the hands of the very class whose interests it is to throw every discredit upon any movement calculated to force Government to take a more liberal view of the present state of things, and we earnestly request our Mahomedan friends in Calcutta to reconsider the position they have taken. We have already expressed our satisfaction at finding that the Mahomedans on this side of India at least do not take the same view of the Congress as their Calcutta friends, and the refusal of one association to join the Congress would not much lessen its representative character. But for the matter of that, it is desirable that there should be no division, even so slight as the one caused by the attitude of the Calcutta Association. There is no reason why the Mahomedans should be jealous of the Hindus in any way. They have undoubtedly suffered more than the Hindus by the introduction of the British rule. But they cannot blame the Hindus for it. Already a lion's share of the patronage in the hands of Government is taken by the English bureaucracy, and if of the lower appointments that remain the Hindus have obtained the best it was not owing to any favour shown them, but rather to the backwardness of the Mahomedans themselves to avail of the opportunities afforded by adapting themselves to the changed circumstances of the country. The Hindus bear no ill-will or jealousy to the Mahomedans. On the contrary, they will be glad to see them educated to their standard and to receive their co-operation in their attempts to overthrow the monopoly now enjoyed by the Anglo-Indians. The Parsees, the Eurasians, and other races have come to see that they can not gain this end by siding with and supporting the Anglo-Indians or by pleasing them. We all stand on a common platform, and our rights can be secured to us only by making a common cause against a foreign monopoly. We should, therefore, warn the Calcutta Mahomedans against being flattered into a belief that they have acted wisely in holding aloof from the agitation that is being carried on, not to force but to strengthen the hands of Government that have found themselves powerless against an influential and an interested class; and request them to correct the error before it is too late. If they have to rise it is by making a common cause with the Hindus and not by being in opposition to them.

THE KONKAN PASSENGER TRAFFIC.—The Mahratta remarks:—The recent accident to Messrs. Shepherd and Co.'s coasting steamer brings the question of the whole passenger trade on the Konkan coast to the front. The Company may be said to have nearly obtained a monopoly of the passenger trade which may be said to be entirely of their creation. But while we commend the enterprise we regret to observe that the convenience, wants, and from the recent accident we may even say the safety of the passengers is not duly attended to. Overcrowding the passengers is a constant complaint and the Company had been found guilty of the same by our Courts. We also hear of the ferries not being anchored at the harbours, while the last accident has clearly shown how lightly the captains do their duty. Under these circumstances we think it is time for the executive to interfere and see that proper provision for the convenience of passengers is made and carried out by the Company, who, as public carriers, are responsible to Government for good management.

PROFESSOR WORDSWORTH ON THE NATIONAL LEAGUE.—The attitude which Professor Wordsworth, of the Bombay Educational Department, has thought fit to assume towards the Bengal National League, has been a matter of deep regret to his numerous friends in the Native community. The learned Professor, it will be remembered, did us yeoman's service in the dark days of the unfortunate Ilbert Bill controversy. He then took up his powerful pen to show the utter unreasonableness of the outcry which his countrymen in India had raised against the proposal to invest half-a-dozen carefully selected Native magistrates with criminal jurisdiction in petty criminal cases over European British subjects. Although his incisive logic and unanswerable arguments failed to convince his infuriated countrymen who had for the time being utterly lost their reason, they clearly showed that the supporters of the Ilbert Bill had a very strong case. Professor Wordsworth, in his admirable letters on that ill-fated measure, pointed out in plain and emphatic terms that it was impossible to expect any reform in the present system of Indian administration from the beaureaucracy which rules over the country. That such a high-minded and right-thinking man as the learned Professor should feel called upon to say anything against the Bengal National League and its supporters is really very unfortunate.—Lahore Tribune.

SIR ALFRED LYALL'S SUCCESSOR.—It would be interesting to know with what feelings Sir Auckland Colvin would be received by the public of the North-West Provinces. Sir Auckland is undoubtedly an intelligent and experienced administrator, possessing valuable information in matters financial. He was one of the mediators between the Europeans and the Natives during the hot Ilbert Bill controversy. It would not be safe at the present stage to pass an opinion on his merits as the Minister of Finance. During his régime the public expenditure has increased, and the obnoxious income-tax worries the public, but it is useless to blame him for this state of affairs that is the outcome of the warlike policy of Lord Dufferin, but even now Sir Auckland is doing his best to minimise the evil of extravagance. Indeed, it is believed that he has the principal hand in the recent movement to reduce the public expenditure.—Bombay Summachar.

THE FAWCETT MEMORIAL FUND.—Bombay is always foremost in starting memorial funds, but somehow or other it always happens that after the first rush the movements are neglected. For instance, when the second Sir Jamsetjee Jeejeebhoy Baronet's memorial was started unusual activity prevailed in Bombay, large amounts were subscribed and papers teemed with recommendations as to how the fund was to be utilised. But we should like to know where is the fund now, how much does it amount to, and what interest has accumulated thereon. Many of the subscribers to the fund have passed away, some have left this country, and we wonder very much whether the remainder will ever be able to see the fund put to its proper use. At any rate, will Mr. Dosabhoj Framjee, one of the secretaries, inform the public how the case stands. Twenty-five months have passed since the Ripon Memorial Fund was started, and what is the result? Since the last meeting of the committee, held some months ago, we have heard nothing of the matter. The Sir R. Temple fund was started before he left these shores, his successor has retired after finishing his term of five years, and Lord Reay has acted here nearly two years, and still the memorial statue is not in its place. Is this creditable to Bombay? The public are helpless in the matter. We look to the promoters of the movements to carry them through. They must not undertake more than they can well manage.—Jam-i-Jamshed.

THE DYSEPTIC IN INDIA.

Dim dawn behind the tamarisks—the sky is saffron yellow—

As the women in the village grind the corn:

And the minas seek the river-side, each calling to his fellow

That the day—the staring Eastern day is born.

Oh! the white dust on the highway! Oh! the tetches in the byway!

Oh! the clammy fog that hovers over earth!

And at Home they're making merry 'neath the white and scarlet berry—

What part have India's exiles in their mirth?

Full day behind the tamarisks—the sky is blue and staring,

As the cattle go afield beneath the yoke.

And they bear One o'er the field-path who is past all hope or caring

To the glaut below the curling wreaths of smoke.

Call on Rama going slowly as ye bear a brother lowly!

Call on Rama—he may hear perhaps your voice!

With our hymn books and our psalters we appeal to other altars

And to-day we bid Good Christian men rejoice!

High noon behind the tamarisks—the sun is hot above us

As at Home the Christmas Day is breaking wan.

They will drink our healths at dinner—those who tell us how they love us—

And forget us till another year be gone.

Oh! the toil that knows no breaking! Oh! the heimweh ceaseless, aching!

Oh! the black dividing Sea and alien Plain!

Youth was cheap—wherefore we sold it. Gold was good—we hoped to hold it,

And to-day we know the fullness of our gain.

Grey dusk behind the tamarisks—the parrots fly together

As the sun is sinking slowly over Home;

And his last ray seems to mock us shackled in a lifelong tether

That drags us back howe'er so far we roam.

Hard her service, poor payment—she in ancient, tattered raiment—

India, she the grim Step Mother of our kind

If a year of life be lent her, if her temple's shrine we enter, The door is shut, we may not look behind.

Dark night behind the tamarisks—the owls begin their chorus

As the cunches from the temple scream and bray.

With the weary years behind us and the hopeless years before us, Let us honour, oh! my brothers, Christmas Day.

Call a truce then to our labours—let us feast with friends and neighbours

And be merry—as the custom of our caste.

For, if faint and forced the laughter and if sadness follows after,

We are richer by one mocking Christmas passed.—R. K.

OBITUARY.

THE EARL OF IDDESLEIGH.

The excellent man, thorough gentleman, and popular, if not strong, statesman, whose loss, before the completion of his sixty-ninth year, will be deplored by every lover of his country, whatever his political opinions, will chiefly be known to our readers as Secretary of State for India. There is, perhaps, scarcely a post in the Government which demands from its holder more complete freedom from party prejudice, a more thorough impartiality, a greater power of receiving, accepting, and digesting, new ideas, than the Indian Secretaryship. In all these points the then Sir S. Northcote, when at the India Office, shone above all compeers, contrasting alike with the insouciance of Whig predecessors, and with the vulgar and offensive bumptiousness of his immediate successor. He was, in fact, a model Indian Secretary; and, in the financial relations between the mother country and her great dependency, in which the latter has habitually "gone to the wall," he always made a resolute stand for Indian interests. It is an open secret that he protested most strongly in the Cabinet against the charging against Indian Revenues of any portion of the expense of the Abyssinian War, which occurred during his tenure of the seals of the India Office, and in which he, in common with (unfortunately) a minority of the Ministry, thought that India had done all, and more than all, which could fairly be expected of her, by gratuitously supplying troops to aid in a war which in no wise concerned her.

Seeing how desirable it was that the Secretary for India should become acquainted with Indian officers of both services in a less formal manner than is obligatory in prearranged interviews, Sir S. Northcote (as he then was) introduced, at his own expense, the happy innovation of occasional dîners at the India Office, where prominent civil servants and military men, who chanced to be at home on leave, had the welcome, and highly appreciated, opportunity of comparatively unrestrained intercourse with himself, and the members of his Council. These réunions were of the pleasantest, and were always looked forward to. But they ended with the genial Sir Stafford, being whittled down by his niggardly successor into a rare (and, in all senses, chilly) evening "Reception."

Generally liked in the Commons, the deceased Statesman was—a rare test of kindness, as well as of impartiality—universally admired and respected throughout India, and in the Indian services. It was felt that anyone, and everyone, might claim, and would receive, due consideration of any matter involving injustice or hardship, even though "the case" might have been "previously decided." He was, as above said, a model Indian Secretary; and, it might be added, a model of the old class of English country gentlemen; a class to whose members, devoting, as did he, their lifelong energies to promoting the welfare of the State, England owes the major part of its liberties. It was truly a deserved Euthanasia that Stafford Henry Northcote should pass away "in harness," esteemed by his Sovereign, admired and respected even by his political opponents, and truly described by foreign contemporary statesmen as "the embodiment of honour and of Parliamentary urbanity."

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

INDIA UNDER QUEEN VICTORIA.*

No publication could be more opportune, while everyone is thinking of the Jubilee Commemoration of Her Majesty's reign, than a record of the history and progress of her greatest Dependency. If the history be in some respects of a chequered character; if reverses, military and political, have once and again occurred; if a terrible, and all but overwhelming, crisis threatened to fulfil Native prophecy by shattering British rule at the close of the century of existence allotted to it, the advance of the Indian peoples in everything which constitutes substantial progress has been most striking; nor is it too much for the historian to assert, that more real, and seemingly durable, prosperity has been ensured to the Indian Peninsula during the past fifty, than during the previous five hundred, years. With the establishment, throughout the land, of the Pax Britannica, with the conversion of turbulent and quarrelsome chiefs into peaceable and contented feudatories of Her Majesty, to whose Representative all their disputes are referred for decision, the once harassed peasant may in good sooth beat his sword into ploughshares, and his spears into pruning-hooks.

With such facts before him, Captain Trotter's task must have been a pleasant, as well as, comparatively speaking, an easy one. He has been well advised in selecting as his starting-point the advent of a new Governor-General, Lord Auckland, rather than the commencement of the Queen's reign. (For, somehow, Indian events are as surely classed by Anglo-Indians according to the Governor-General (or Viceroy) under whom they occurred, as racing occurrences are reckoned by the name of the horse which wins the "Derby" of the year.) And the first event of importance with which he has to deal is the first Afghan War. As to the justice, or necessity, of this war, opinions always have differed, and probably will for ever differ. At all events, the soundness of judgment of those who believed Russia's reiterated assertions that she had "no intention of interfering in the internal affairs of" this, that, or the other, Central Asian State, has received a curious commentary in her rapid advance to the borders of territory indubitably Afghan. Captain Trotter is not singular in thinking that all the objects aimed at by the first Afghan war might have been attained without bloodshed. But it is surely using the language of a scold, rather than that of a historian, to speak of Lord Auckland as being pushed by his secretaries "along the slope which led down to a black abyss of crime, disaster, and disgrace." (I., 33.) Nor are the author's comments (II., 349, 365) on the inception of the last Afghan war marked by a more judicial tone.

We are well satisfied with the manner in which Captain Trotter deals with the causes of the Mutiny of 1857, a subject which both Sir J. Kaye and Colonel Mangleson have handled at some length. He stands on safe ground when he bases his opinion on those of Sir J. Lawrence and John Nicholson, and holds to their view that the greased cartridges were (to use an American phrase) "only a circumstance;" that "the sense of power induced (II., 90) the Sepoys to rebel;" that "they only wanted an opportunity to try their strength with" their masters. It will be well if the lesson be learnt by our Indian rulers, that opportunity for such concerted action as took place in 1857 should for ever be withheld. It is, perhaps, germane to this subject to suggest how far the utilisation of Indian forces in the colonies, first carried into effect by that farseeing statesman, Lord Beaconsfield, might not, with the location of colonial forces in India, be a very useful item in the Imperial Federation programme. We should at least be following in the footsteps of that mighty nation of rulers whose motto was Divide et impera, and who, as though expressly in order to give us a hint, maintained Indian cohorts in Britain.

The mutinies naturally recall to the mind the central figure in them. Every man, it is said, has a demigod, and though historians ought to avoid heroes and demigods as married ladies should avoid lovers, we are not disposed to quarrel with Captain Trotter for having, in this respect, followed Macaulay. He has certainly selected, in John Lawrence, a hero who, like Macaulay's William III., was every inch a man; and has narrated his career as Ruler of the Punjab and as Viceroy with a sympathy born of intense admiration; his narrative of the Durbars held by Lawrence, as Viceroy, at Lahore and at Agra, may be commended as being not only accurate, but eminently graphic.

The period embraced in this book is nearly bisected, as Euclid would say, by the great change which introduced the Queen to her Oriental subjects as the direct Ruler of India. What the Natives expected from a change merely nominal it is not easy to tell; sooth to say, it is all but impossible to know what a Native really does expect from any change of any kind whatsoever. But, probably owing to the Native longing for autocracy, for the concentration of power in one person, rather than in a mere abstraction, certain it is that the effect of Her Majesty's proclamation, assuming direct sovereignty, was simply prodigious (II., 113), certainly greater than that of her adopting an appropriate title.

The East India Company, the innocent scapegoat of the Mutiny, receives from Captain Trotter a tribute of qualified admiration only; but it passed away amid the lively regrets of its servants, both in India and at home. The transfer of all power to a Cabinet Minister, mainly swayed by English Parliamentary considerations, has, in many respects, been to India an all but unmixed evil, and has repeatedly affected the nature of her taxation to a degree which has been simply disastrous; while the abolition of the Indian Navy, the creation of the Staff Corps, and the virtual annihilation of that splendid and well-acclimatised force, the Company's European army, have been productive of all but unmitigated mischief.

The Railways, the Telegraphs, the Canals, the Grand Trunk Road, and the thousands of miles of subsidiary roads, constructed by municipalities throughout the country, have long since disposed of the "empty beer-bottle" sneer. The bulk of the population may possibly be awakening to the fact that these are all means to the end of rendering impossible the famines which have from time immemorial devastated India, and with which all her Rulers have hitherto been utterly unable to cope; and our author's account of the various famines which have occurred in recent times (II., 182, 232, 313, 371) will be found, if not pleasant, most instructive reading. But the most ignorant ryot cannot fail to recognise the fact that he can travel on the highway without being strangled or poisoned, and the Zemindar may rejoice that his slumbers are no longer liable to be interrupted, and his hoarded wealth to be plundered, by a band of a score or two practised housebreakers.

Whether the average Native appreciates our interference with female infanticide as he does our suppression of Thuggee and Dacoitee, may well be doubted: it is a direct embargo on his rights to do as he will with his own: yet for this too the time will come.

Captain Trotter's self-imposed limits of time do not allow him to deal with the last development of our care for the Native, that (so closely associated with Her Majesty's name) of care for the women; one which will be daily more appreciated. But our author has adequately shown the vast advance made in every way during the period which he has undertaken to treat. If, in so doing, he has, occasionally, violated the dignity of history by too overtly displaying his own sympathies and prejudices, if he has here and there written in contemptuous terms of able men who have grown grey in the Government service, but from whom he has the misfortune to differ in opinion, he has a locus penitentiae in a second edition, which is pretty sure to be called for. In any case, he has written a very readable and instructive book, which most Anglo-Indians will be glad to add to their libraries.

CÆSAR IN KENT.*

Mr. Vine does not exaggerate the attractiveness of the subject of which he treats when he says (p. 128), that Cæsar's landing in Britain, and the events which followed it, leading him, after scarcely disguised disaster, to leave the island for a time, "form one of the most interesting and stirring pages of history."

The author, as the title of his little work indicates, believes, the learned astronomical disquisitions of the late Astronomer Royal notwithstanding, that the first place where Cæsar touched British ground was in Kent, at Deal, and not at Pevensey in Sussex. We have always held to this opinion as being most strictly in conformity to the statements in the "Commentaries of Cæsar"; and an additional piece of corroborative evidence (of which, though not wholly destitute of local knowledge, we were previously ignorant) is adduced by Mr. Vine. On Cæsar's first landing, one of his soldiers, according to Valerius Maximus (II., ii. 23), sprang from a boat on to a rock off-shore, from which elevated post he inflicted much injury on the enemy; but, the tide having receded, his position became accessible to them, and they ultimately dislodged him, severely wounded, and with the loss of his shield. Now, such rocks are well known to exist, under the name of "the Malms," opposite Deal Marine Barracks. And, says Mr. Vine, "there are no such rocks at any of those other localities which have been named as the scene of Cæsar's disembarkation." We should, assuming Mr. Vine's information as to the "other localities" to be correct, regard this as clinching the argument in favour of Deal being Cæsar's landing-place on both his expeditions to Britain.

This matter of the landing-place of course underlies all the subsidiary questions, where this or that particular combat between the Britons and their invaders may have taken place; and we readily admit that Mr. Vine's local knowledge, acquired as Vicar of Patricbourne and Bridge, in the valley of the lesser Stour, and close to the probable scene of the first pitched battle of Cæsar's second expedition, has enabled him to identify, with much plausibility, the position of most of these engagements. We think that the general scope of the Roman operations, up to Cæsar's crossing of the Thames at Cowey Stakes, may fairly be deduced from the statements of the classical historians, and that Mr. Vine lays far too much stress on the British "Triads," and other similar sources, which are, surely, not to be accepted, except in so far as they may agree with, or amplify, Roman accounts. The latter deserve, if not implicit confidence, very close attention. And, while we desire to avoid all captious criticism, we cannot but remark on one error, from which a careful study of his own text-book would have saved our author. He speaks (p. 167) of the seventh Legion (which, on the first expedition, had been mercilessly cut up while foraging near Ringwould,* and which had, when rescued from annihilation by Cæsar, left many prisoners in the enemy's hands), as "Cæsar's favourite and most reliable corps." Now, in this very battle, it was—according to the British accounts (whatever they may be worth) given by our author at p. 143—the tenth legion, at the head of which Cæsar placed himself in person; the very legion of whom it is repeatedly said (Comment. B.G., I., 40, 42) that this was the corps which Cæsar had principally favoured, and which, on account of its proved pluck, he most trusted. We suspect that the Britons would not have caught the Tenth "napping," as they did the Seventh. We ought, too, to note that our author speaks both of Portus Itius and of Gessoriacum as being the equivalent of Boulogne. We have not a doubt but that Wissant represents the name, if not the actual locality, of the Portus, which probably "stretched up under the Noirmottes as far as St. Omer." At all events, Gessoriacum and Itius, two distinct places, cannot both be Boulogne.

We pass over, as not directly concerned with the subject-matter of the little book, the introductory chapters. It is, of course, possible that the Britons were the leaders of the Gauls in the historical attack on Rome, that Brennus was their chief, and that he did not, when throwing his sword and belt into the scale in which the ransom of Rome was being weighed, say "Vae victis," but "Gwae gwaethidigion" (a phrase at which the Roman Patres Conscripti—or such of them as were left—might well open their ears). We could not enter into these questions without being duly prepared, like Mr. Vine, by a deep draught from the Pierian spring of Druidical and hardie lore. This we may quaff at a future period. Meanwhile we may sincerely thank Mr. Vine for the historical part of his work, which is thorough, and most interesting to any and every Englishman.

LADY BURTON'S "ARABIAN NIGHTS."†

The "Arabian Nights" tales are familiar by name throughout the length and breadth of the land, and yet how comparatively few persons could give even an outline of one solitary story amongst them! The reason is not far to seek, since there never has been a really good translation of this most untranslatable of Oriental works. From such a sweeping assertion must be excluded the happy and successful effort of Mr. John Payne; but this latter work was printed for the Villon Society, and the issue being restricted to five hundred copies, while the author bound himself "not to reproduce the work in its complete form," the version is and must ever be "caviare to the general."

Such being the case Sir Richard Burton bethought himself that he would employ his leisure hours in presenting to the public a trustworthy and withal picturesque translation of the "Thousand and One Nights;" and who more fitted for such a task? It will be seen from the sketch of his career recently published that he is an Arab scholar so profound that he visited the sacred City of Mecca disguised as a Native pilgrim, and not a soul discovered the secret, which had it transpired it is almost needless to add the daring and enthusiastic "Haji" would have never lived to undertake the self-imposed duty of "Englishing" the "Nights." Sir Richard Burton is, moreover, thoroughly au fait with Native habits, thoughts, and modes of life, so that the Notes which he appended to his work give the fullest insight into Muhammadanism which can well be imagined. To our mind, indeed, they are more enjoyable than the tales themselves, which—rank heresy as it may be to make such an avowal—are somewhat involved, and, as is always the case in Eastern stories, not infrequently far fetched and impossible.

But the new translation, valuable and sound as it was, possessed the demerit that the indelicacy of the original text appeared in all their glaring hideousness; not a sentence was pruned, not an expression was toned down to suit civilised ears; the notes, too, seemed to have caught the contagion, and the result was a work so indelicately indelicate that its very possession could scarcely be avowed. His wife has now come to the rescue, and presented a "readable" version of tales "beside which the flood of Moslem fiction flows thin and shallow." Associating with herself Mr. Justin McCarthy as a colleague in the task of purification, she has succeeded in so far as success was possible, for it is a truism to state that her husband's edition is far more full of fire, life and pithiness than the more refined bantling for which his wife has stood sponsor. This was absolutely unavoidable, alike by the nature of the tales as by the circumstances of the case. Could some of Dickens' inimitable sketches of lower life be rendered in grammatical English and retain the charm of the original? Could baby-talk be Anglicised, and keep its simplicity? Equally could Orientalism be purified and preserve the racy brusqueness of the original.

As regards the cadence and balance of sentences so dear to the Oriental mind, though a praiseworthy attempt has been made to retain the force and vigour of the original text, it is no dispraise to assert that success in this direction can at best be but incomplete. The exquisite rhythm of one of the richest and most melodious languages in the world cannot be transplanted to an alien soil; but a single extract will suffice to show that much has been done, and that more was scarcely possible:—"Wight clashed against wight, and knight dashed upon knight, and hot waxed the fight, and sore was the affright, and nor parley nor cries of quarter helped their plight; and they stinted not to charge and to smite, right hand meeting right, now to hack and to hew with blades bright white, till day turned to night, and gloom oppressed the sight."

But if such passages as this give but a feeble idea of the mellifluous flow of the Arabic which they represent, what hope can there be that the verses can be adequately rendered? It is not within the nature of things to succeed in this direction, and Sir Richard Burton has only failed because failure was inevitable.

These criticisms are not penned in a deprecatory spirit—far otherwise, for we have no hesitation in pronouncing the present version of the "Arabian Nights" to be incontestably the best extant. Perfection is not given to mortals, but the tales now appear in as satisfactory a garb as is possible; and henceforth there will be no excuse should the English public fail to become familiar with a work which all should read—the time-honoured "Thousand and One Tales."

PUCK AND PEARL.*

Puck and Pearl—who are they? what are they? English children going to India with their parents; when there, as is, alas! too frequently the case, one of them full ill, and they were both sent off to the hills to recover their health. While sick and ailing the "Ayah" conceived the idea of telling them stories of the East—for all Orientals are great adepts at tale-telling. The idea is happy, and it has been carried out with no inconsiderable degree of taste and judgment; evidently the author is "well up" in the folk-lore of India, and her readers will pick up a vast deal of information in a fascinating shape. Mrs. Macdonald has also contrived to invest her hero and heroine with not a little degree of charm and fascination, while the pictures do credit alike to the artist, Mr. Graham, and the Automatic Engraving Company, which reproduced them. Altogether the volume is well calculated to amuse and while away the fitful hour.

THE Government of the Straits Settlements, the Pioneer says, are in difficulties in the matter of a satisfactory survey, and recently applied to the Government of India for the services of an experienced officer to assist them. As no officer on the active list could be spared, the Government offered the work to Mr. J. B. N. Hennessey, late Deputy Surveyor-General, who since his retirement continues to reside in India. Mr. Hennessey, however, has declined the service.

WRESTLING must be a lucrative profession in Cashmere. On the 10th ult., fifty thousand men gathered on the Jammu parade ground to witness matches between fifty wrestlers of note. The entertainment was under the patronage of his Highness the Maharaja, who had provided fourteen prizes, the first being a pair of golden bracelets, a pair of Cashmere shawls and Rs. 200 in cash. The other prizes were gold necklaces, ranging from Rs. 500 to Rs. 200 in value. The event of the day was the struggle between a Mahomedan and a Hindoo Jat, both from the Umritsur district, which lasted for an hour and a half, when the Mahomedan won, and was "instantly presented with the first prize."—Civil and Military Gazette.

RUSSIA AND ENGLAND.

ALTHOUGH the news from India tells only of loyal preparations to celebrate next month the Jubilee Year of the Queen of England's reign, there are not wanting alarmists who would have us believe that the storm cloud of war is lowering over our Empire in the East. The Christmas chimes which are still supposed to ring into men's ears the message of peace and goodwill said to have been given to them nearly two thousand years ago, sounded over Europe the other day in tones of an alarm bell rather than in those of a pleasant pealing—for they were echoed through camps in arms. Germany and France are waiting for the signal to rush at each other's throats, Austria and Italy are preparing for the day of battle, and Russia is watching her opportunity in Europe and in Asia. Poor Turkey is again in the position of the sick man who has neither friends nor heirs-at-law, but only public nurses as watchers at his bedside. At present these watchers are France and Russia. Novel-readers may be excused if they think of Mr. Chuffey in the hands of Mrs. Gamp and Betsy Prig. "We gives no trust ourselves, and looks for a good deal of trust elscwhere," was the religious belief of those excellent ladies and the treatment of the patient was probably founded on such well-established principles as in the case of Turkey might easily be followed by his nurses—"turning his fingers the wrong way, and keeping him afore a fire—a certain cure." That France should be anxious for Russia's friendship at present, and that she might indirectly throw her influence on the side of the Muscovite against England is possible enough, for France is sore on account of our continued occupation of Egypt. But France has yet to settle with Germany, and it is not likely that she will run the risk of a rupture with this country, however much she may bluster. Russia alone is the only foe that England may have to deal with in the near future. Is there cause for any immediate alarm? So far as Turkey is concerned it must be accepted as a fact that Russia means mischief. Constantinople has too long been the coveted prize of Slavonic ambition ever to become an abandoned idea. Where the treasure is the heart will be also, and Russia will never cease from her endeavours to get there. But is it necessary to believe also that in order to cripple England's action in Europe she intends to invade Afghanistan in the Spring? This is the latest scare. She is said to be concentrating her forces on the frontiers of Khorassan, and that an outbreak of hostilities between the Russian and Afghanistan outposts is only a matter of a few weeks' delay. A very sensational telegram to this effect has been going the round of all the English papers, and it appears to have found credence in many quarters. Colonel Malleon, who has given much time and study to the subject of Russian aggression in the East, appears to think that the danger is very imminent, and advocates that the counter-game of England should be the Federation of our Empire. He has written an article to this effect in the columns of a weekly contemporary, and promises to enlarge on the subjects in the columns of a monthly Review. But if the scare be well founded, the remedy suggested comes too late. Imperial Federation has been a very plausible idea, and has had many supporters in England and in the Colonies, but we have not yet seen any practical scheme put forth showing how the idea is to be carried out so as to meet the several and conflicting interests involved in it. When there are worthy Englishmen at home who hold that India is not worth our keeping it will be difficult to persuade our Australian friends that they should help us with men and money in case of Russia invading Afghanistan. Colonel Malleon, in the article to which we have referred, quotes the advice of an American friend to the effect that England has only to consolidate her Empire so as to be impregnable at all points:—

sideration of the foreign affairs of the Empire; to convene a really Imperial Parliament, composed of the representatives of the Colonies and the British Islands in strict proportion to population, say one member for every half million of inhabitants; commit to their care the consideration of the foreign affairs of the Empire, and you solve the difficulty. You may depend upon it that the feeling of pride which will be engendered amongst your colonists by the conviction that they, too, have a share, and an important share, in the management of the affairs of the Empire; that one of their members may possibly attain a position to which all, British and Colonists alike, will have the right to aspire, the position of Foreign Secretary, or, as the holder of the office might be styled under the new arrangement, Chancellor of the Empire, would reconcile them, and more than reconcile them, to the expenses which would be entailed by a war for the defence of that Empire.

This sounds very well in theory—but how about putting it into practice? It will be too late to attempt it when the artistic New Zealander comes to sketch the ruins of St. Paul's, and we fear that it cannot be done in the manner suggested before that event happens. If Russia really means to contest with England for the Empire of India we must look for the defence of that Empire to the British arms which are now there, aided, as we hope they will be, by brave and loyal Native troops and allies.

THE BLACK CONQUEST.

(By ERNEST WHITE, MADRAS.)

III.

THE BRAHMAN CONQUEST.

To the foreign theorist, speculating on the effects of the application of western science to Indian methods, it must often seem desirable to obtain a clear knowledge of the manner in which the changes which have of late been effected in our political system affect the persons most concerned—the units in the great mass of the agricultural population. To the western philanthropist, it must seem clear that to the Indian peasantry, contented, teeming, and indifferent to the wiles of English-speaking agitators, the solid benefits of English rule have commended themselves; that they feel the advantage of a settled Government, Public Works, Police, and Civil and Criminal Courts; that they are impressed with the advantages accruing from education and railway communication; inspired with feelings of loyalty for the distant Sovereign whose name has been borne to them, and with reverence for the plans for their improvement evolved in the council rooms of the Sirkar. It must be somewhat startling to the philanthropist to know how far from reality is this conception of the political ideas of the greater part of the Indian population. To the mass of the people, outside the circle of the schools and public offices, the conception of British rule is strangely different. The ryot is essentially the outcome of his environment. To him De non apparentibus est non existentibus. The Sirkar is to him as a riddle still unread. He has heard of the "Company" and the "Queen," but he scarcely knows whether the one or the other governs the country, or in what the difference between them consists. The story is told that one of his kind, pressed for an idea of what the former was, replied he had heard that the Company was the Queen's late husband. Speculation so advanced would usually be considered inquisitive and unavailing. All that the peasant knows, or cares to know, is that the white men, by means, first, of deceit, and then of gunpowder, have turned out the Zemindars and the Mahomedans; and that they have now rented out the Government to the Brahman revenue officers, whose business it is to collect as much money as possible from the people, and remit it to the "Doralu" in their country on the lower side of the earth where there is no sun. This scheme, he is convinced, is only saved from being one of wholesale deprivation of all his earnings, by what he pays to the officers on their private account. That withdrawn, he must, as numerous instances testify, lose everything. The insatiable greed of the "Doralu" is only to be satisfied by assuaging the more moderate and reasonable wants of the Brahmans, at Jamabandi and Kist time. When the white-faced tyrant comes amongst the people, the ryot is filled with a terror which he sees reflected in the faces of the great man's Native subordinates as they grovel or fly before him. He is "leprous" looking, savage, given to fierce bursts of rage in which he attacks the dark men about him with blows and loud noises; is uncouth in his gestures, unclean in his habits; is fed by pariahs; is incessantly eating flesh and drinking spirits, and is unnaturally licentious. He passes through the country with an immense affrighted following, eating up the live-stock in every village, harrying the people, chasing wild beasts, pursuing the women, and urging the Tahsildars and Inspectors to extract more Kist; and then disappears for a time, moved thereto by the intercessions, on behalf of the people, of the Brahmans.

The above may seem an over-coloured picture of the mental impressions of the ryot. To those who have lived much in the Mofussil and who know that in an average district, with a population of two to four million souls, the European element seldom numbers more than about twenty persons, the truth will need no demonstration.

Three great facts in connection with our administration are always before the mind of the ryot. Of all else, the spread of education, extension of science and application of art, plans of Government, vernacular printing press, railway communication, legislative enactments, the Russian advance, medical aid to women, social reform or Theosophy, he knows and cares nothing. He does not wish to read, and if he did learn, he would find nothing in the whole range of his vernacular literature beyond stories of the gods, which he knows by rote. The only books he ever happens to see are books in English. He has never received any other idea than that the world is flat, surrounded by mountains filled with savage beasts and white men. All foreign arts are to him Indrajalam—devilry. Of Mr. Whitley Stokes or the Russians he has never heard, while as for the hospital medicines of the white people, they are compounded of fierce drugs, only good for a cold climate, which burn up a man's body or poison him with "bile"; the only safety is in the eye-powder and branding of his own physicians.

All that he knows clearly about the Sirkar is, first, that the ancient landowners and petty princes, to whom he was attached by immemorial ties of affection, relationship and feudal allegiance, who were for the most part Sudras like himself, Nayaks, and Poligars, and who lived amongst his people, have been driven from their holdings, never to return. Secondly, that in their place, an unalterable dominion of Brahman Karnams, Revenue Inspectors, Police Inspectors, Sub-Magistrates, Sheristadars and Tahsildars have sprung up, whose immunity, if he would live, he must always purchase; and, lastly, that the Sirkar has established Civil Courts for the especial purpose of enabling the Sirkar's close ally to prey upon him—our acquaintance the Bunniah.

It is not the purpose of the present writer to enlarge upon the first two reasons for which the world must seem to weigh heavily upon the ryot. Sir William Wedderburn (in that essay in which he likened the ryot, exposed to the exactions of the petty Native executive, to the toad under the harrow) and other writers have done almost all perhaps that mere writing can do in such a matter. A few facts, not altogether worn out, may, however, be brought forward in connection with the Civil Courts. The Civil Court is the special preserve of the Bunniah, just as the Revenue Department is that of the Brahman official. These have lives, liberties and fortunes of the ryot in freehold. Between them they are licensed, after the Government has had its share of the blood of its best subject, to extract all the sustenance left in the carcase.

IV.

THE BUNNIAN'S ALLY.

It is scarcely yet fully realised (though recent Legislative tendencies point to a growing enlightenment) how great a power for unmixt evil the petty Civil Courts scattered over the land exercise in the life of the ryot. It is no exaggeration to say that the establishment of these tribunals has affected the condition of the Indian ryot to a far greater extent than the assumption of direct Government by the Crown; and that their removal would be an event of greater importance to him than was the fall of the Moghul Empire.

The present judicial system, like many other parts of the administration, is the result of two opposing forces: the survival of ancient methods and traditions on the one hand, and the introduction of advanced theoretic conceptions on the other. Its history under the latter of these influences does not extend beyond the commencement of the present century; but the roots of the system are to be found far back in the periods of Native and Mahomedan rule. At neither of these periods was there any distinct Judicial Office. Under the petty principalities (generally no more than hereditary headships of a family or tribe, but occasionally developing into an extended power) which were the ancient and universal characteristic of Hindoo Government, the judicial function was the proper attribute of the tribal chief. He was the dispenser of justice, to whom every difference was referred. His authority was a part of his princely office, and he was considered to adjudicate the disputes of his people by a special wisdom and insight received from the Redresser of all wrongs. His decrees commanded implicit faith and obedience. He was the father and protector as well as the leader of the people, and they accepted his guidance in every detail of their daily life. Every other idea of a public administrator is foreign to the Hindoo mind, still dwelling in the patriarchal period of the evolution of human institutions, and to this day, in spite of every instance of abuse, his memories resort to that happy past. With the extension of Government to the aggregate of many communities, the judicial office still remained with the Gramadhipati or head man of the village community; and the Mussulman advent left the system very little affected by investing the higher judicial authority in Subahdars, the deputies of the sovereign. Where the communal system attained its greatest development, the judicial office was exercised by the village elders; the vox populi was the universal law. Every member of the community had his fixed relations, rights and liabilities; he lived for the benefit of the whole community, and as he shared in the common privileges, his duties were rigorously exacted. Any deviation felt to be from the common good was met with the resistless decree of exclusion. The odium of the community, under the village system, remains to this day the base of the whole social law, still keeping intact customs belonging to the period of the world's infancy.

To this day, any other form of judicial administration remains in India a foreign and extraneous element in the being of the people distinct from their own institutions and habits of thought.

Not one disputed cause out of a hundred comes before the foreign tribunals, in which, by force of immemorial usage, reference has not been had in the first instance to the common voice. The dispute will be submitted to the Madhyarthas, or mediators, so often heard of in every lawsuit. The "caste" will be called, and a communal judgment taken even where resort has already been had to the Government Court.

The advent of a jurisprudence, which is to Hindoo institutions as altruism to the tribal code of the Cherokees, has altered all this. The patriarchal rule has been extirpated and the village communal system is disappearing, or has lost nearly all its peculiar characteristics. Justice is administered by specially employed officers in the pay of the Government who have no lot or share with the people among whom they are placed; the performance of whose duties is simple matter of contract with the Government. The paid Judge, Native or European, is an anomalous growth grafted on the simple institutions of the people. Nothing of the veneration which still in their traditions lingers round the Dharma Savah attaches to him. Nothing of the trust and submission with which the disputes of the people were carried before the council of elders, assembled in the portals of the village temple, is felt for the unfamiliar foreign tribunal. In the one case the disputants went before men to whom they were known from childhood and their fathers before them, and to whom their personal character and that of every witness was familiar. Then there were no costs, no devouring Vakils, no process servers and gomastahs to be bribed, no witnesses to be suborned, no heart-rending delays, no technicalities, "quiddities, cases, tenures and tricks." Whatever the decision was, it protected the helpless, and in face of such a tribunal wrongs were fewer and redress more certain and equitable. The new Court has nothing of this character. Here the machinery is simply adopted for the purpose of weighing conflicting masses of falsehood, and a premium is placed upon perjury. These Courts afford a curious comment on the maxim Interest reipublice ut sit finis litium. They are a special organisation for the breeding of lawsuits. The people who quote the never-failing observation that "the Hindoos are a litigious people" must be surprised to be told that the vice is one of our special creation, and to which it is part of the chief business of our administration to be daily pandering. We have endowed a people who are alive with the instinct of gambling, with a system to which the "hells" of Homburg and Baden-Baden were as nothing. The game here is not all one of chance. It requires the finest skill—skill of a sort which is one with the vilest perversions of human nature—cruelty, treachery and falsehood. In these Courts fortunes are amassed and squandered, lives ruined and families beggared, with a constancy and rapidity which would have made the denizens of Alsatia stare. Forgery and perjury are as regular means of livelihood as ever were cards and dice. The Civil Court is the focus of all the lying, cunning, hatred, and intrigue of the Taluq in which it is placed. No honest profession offers the opportunities to the unscrupulous, which a law Court affords. Here is the royal road to fortune, the means of venting every feeling of malice and revenge, of aggrandizing one's self and ruining one's enemy. The man who can trick his neighbour out of his property or defraud his relations has only to come to the Civil Court, and if he can skillfully put together the proper fabric of lying testimony and false documents, and distance the devices of the opposite party, his fortune is assured. It is a profession into which all can enter, and every man take his chance. The only capital and the only training needed are lying and intrigue. Road-poisoning and dacoity are disappearing. The Civil Courts have superseded them. The simple fact is that the whole existing machinery of the Courts is such as to make perjury a special and lucrative trade; a trade for which of all others the average Mofussil Hindoo (to whom "talent" is synonymous with "cunning" and the most prized success is that which has been attained by lying and treachery) has the greatest aptitude. The great dependence in these Courts is on oral evidence; and the Hindoo has attained to a skill and unscrupulousness in the art of contriving oral evidence with which no other people can compare.

To people whose moral evolution is still in its infancy we apply a system of jurisprudence which is the product of centuries of free institutions, among a great and enlightened people. It is a principle of that jurisprudence that truth shall be presumed, while the exact reverse is what should be laid down in India. It is no fault of the wretched people that it should be so. Falsehood is as natural to the majority of them as to badly treated children.

In these Courts there is no knowledge of the personal character of the witnesses whose statements are so relied on, and no attempt to appeal to the religious or moral sentiment of the people. One of the old Native judges would, in a land or inheritance case, have gone to the spot, collected the people, called in the assistance of the village elders, examined landmarks, searched all the old papers that could be produced, heard what everyone had to say; and if the decision depended on the "Yea" or "Nay" of any particular person he would have administered a solemn religious oath, and then only received oral statement as evidence. Our Judges seldom or never visit a disputed locality. They write down the evidence of half-a-dozen carefully tutored witnesses on either side, after administering a farcical affirmation; strike the balance of perjury and pass a decree, which is rapidly and relentlessly executed.

The following appears in the Sind Times (Kurrachee):—"It is not very long ago that two Pathans brought two women of European descent from Australia, but the women having changed their minds declined to go to Afghanistan, and sought the magistrate's protection."

TRADE must be brisk in Pondicherry just now, if the authorities know how to spell "opportunity." They had been boycotted, on account of unpopular taxes, to the point of starvation; and now, though nothing has been settled, a truce of twenty days has been arranged by the personal exertions of the Mayor. For three short weeks the shops are open; but, after that, anything may happen. The European residents from the Governor downwards will be wise to prepare for eventualities by doing their shopping now for the next six months. With a full store-room, a mutton club, a milch-cow, and the compound sown with wheat, a household ought to stand a good deal of boycotting.

THE Royal Humane Society has awarded a medal to Captain H. N. M. RAE, 45th Sikhs, for his gallantry in saving, with the assistance of Captain Holmes of the same regiment, the life of Trumpeter S. Meehan, Royal Artillery, who fell down a well at Rawul Pindi on the 5th of October last.

THE Government of India have sanctioned the move of the 6th Bombay Cavalry from Quetta to Sibi, where the 5th and 7th Bombay Cavalry will meet them, and there be encamped for Brigadier-General Luck, C.B., commanding the Sind District, to carry out cavalry manoeuvres in January.

MAJOR A. F. FLETCHER, R.A., Assistant to the Inspector-General of Ordnance, Bombay Circle, has been appointed to be Superintendent of the Gun Carriage Factory, Madras, in succession to Colonel H. McLeod, R.A., who has been appointed Inspector-General of Ordnance, and Lieutenant E. S. F. Walker, R.A., has been appointed to officiate as Commissary of Ordnance, 4th class, vice Lieutenant L. G. Rennick, 18th Bengal Infantry, has been permitted to proceed on leave to India; and Surgeon P. J. Damania has been allowed to leave Mandalay for Bombay in anticipation of leave.

A GENERAL Order issued from the Adjutant-General's office notifies that Lieutenant-General his Royal Highness Arthur William Patrick Albert, Duke of Connaught and Strathearn, K.G., K.T., K.P., G.C.S.I., G.C.M.G., C.B., A.D.C., assumed command of the Bombay Army on the 14th December, 1886, in pursuance of G.O. No. 579 of 14th ult.

THE proposed Jubilee celebration by the Imperial land force^s is engaging the attention of the War Office authorities. It is anticipated that at least 100,000 men will be under arms, and embracing representative corps from all parts of the Empire. About half the entire force, it is said, will be composed of British regular troops, and almost an equal number of the auxiliary forces. India will probably furnish her battalions, and Australia and other Colonies are to be invited to send troops to assist in the celebration of the Jubilee.

DEPUTY SURGEON-GENERAL RICHARD WOLSELEY, Meerut Division, who died on the forenoon of Wednesday last, from the effects of a fall from his horse on the preceding Saturday, was the second son of the late Major Garnet Wolseley, 25th King's Own Borderers; being a brother of Lord Wolseley and of Colonel G. B. Wolseley, C.B., A.D.C., Assistant Adjutant-General, Lahore Division. Colonel Wolseley went at once to Meerut on hearing of the accident, and stayed with his brother till the end. The deceased officer entered the army in 1854, and served in the Crimea War with the 20th Regiment, being present at the battles of Alma, Balaclava and Inkerman, where he was wounded, and at the siege and fall of Sebastopol. He also served with the expedition against the Mahsud Waziris in 1881, as Principal Medical Officer. He was appointed to the Meerut Division as Deputy Surgeon-General in March last; but had served some time previously in India, and had many friends in this country.

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL SEYMOUR BARROW, 10th Bengal Lancers, whose death at sea on his way to England on leave, has already been announced, was (says the Lahore paper) a distinguished soldier. The ideal of an Indian Cavalry officer, his reputation among brother officers, at headquarters, and in the wide circle of the outside public, stood as high as that of any military man in the country; and his sudden death is alike a shock to his friends and a serious loss to the Army. Colonel Barrow served with distinction in the Afghan war, being present at the actions of Kam Dakka, Jugdulluk and Padkao Shana; being severely wounded, having his charger wounded, and being twice mentioned in despatches. For his services in Afghanistan he obtained a brevet majority. Later on, he served in the Egyptian expedition of 1882, being present at the action of Tell-el-Kebir, for which he was again mentioned in despatches, and was promoted to brevet lieutenant-colonel. Colonel, at that time Captain, Barrow was severely wounded at Padkao Shana. He was acting as orderly officer to General Palliser, and engaged in a single-handed combat with an Afghan malik, who was armed with rifle, tulwar, knife and shield. The Afghan, as Barrow rode at him, fired his rifle, wounding Barrow's horse. The two then closed, and the English officer received a couple of sword cuts, one of which disabled his bridle hand, the other cutting deeply into his forearm.

THE Bengali gives its countrymen some well-needed advice in regard to the meeting of the "National" Congress which held its first sitting recently at Calcutta. It says:—"We have a word to say to the Bengal delegates. Our countrymen from other parts of India are our guests, and we are their hosts; and it would be our duty as such to accord to them the most prominent share in the discussions that will take place. Let us speak when necessary, but let us rather be listeners than speakers."

THE doctrine of averages is curiously illustrated year by year in the Resolution upon the mortality from wild animals and snakes. The number of human beings [out of the 250 millions who are destined annually to meet a violent death from the beasts of the field might be put down in advance with tolerable certainty at about 22,500, and of these it would be safe to prophesy that 20,000 would fall victims to snakes. This year's returns, indeed, show a slight increase on these figures; and, if compared with those of ten years back, the increase would be considerable; but it is so steady as to be clearly attributable to the increase of population. In the case of snakes, which are responsible for the vast majority of deaths, it would seem that the Government at last began to despair of repressive measures, and are resigning the matter to the Local Boards. "It is through their exertions only that any improvement can at present be effected." But until the Local Boards can reform the whole social system of the country, can induce the people to eschew mud huts, to raise their dwellings from the ground, to keep other granaries than holes in the wall, to stay indoors until it is broad daylight, to wear stout ankle boots, and, lastly and chiefly, to kill snakes when they see them, there is not much chance that the ravages caused by the cobra and karait will sensibly diminish. So long as the people themselves regard the matter, statistics and all, with profound indifference, while they refuse to recognise one sort of snake from another, and while, on the occurrence of a snake-bite, it is considered of as much importance that the animal should escape as that the man should recover, the Local Boards will have their work cut out for them. In regard to wild animals, the total number of deaths has been practically stationary. On the other hand, the number recorded to have been destroyed has slightly decreased; so that it cannot be said that the reward system has proved its efficiency very strikingly during the past year. In fact with Native nature constituted as it is, there is another side to the reward question, which might have entitled it to the consideration of the Finance Committee, if that well-abused body had had any spare time on its busy hands. Rewards, no doubt, act as an incentive to the destruction of animals, but when the business is confined to a small special class, they also lead to preserving. And just as the raising of the reward on snakes in some districts of the North-West merely brought about their artificial breeding, so the large sum now paid on tigers makes the local shikari anxious to keep up the stock at the same time as he reduces it. Equipped with an antiquated weapon, but with a perfect knowledge of the habits of the animal, he can rely upon killing two or three in his beat, and that is enough to bring him in a comfortable subsistence. He has no large views about the interests of humanity, and had very much rather they were not killed than killed by anyone but himself. With wolves, which in these Provinces are more destructive than any other beast, it may be different; the wolf is a vagabond brute, and must be shot whenever he is come across. But a tiger's habits are so well marked that the jungle people in his locality know as much about him as an English gamekeeper know of his pheasants; and any sportsman who has been that way engaged must have met with instances of obstruction from the village shikaris for their own good reasons. As to loss of life, the same notoriety which attends a tiger's footsteps prevents his taking to man-killing unawares; and the wildest district is soon warned whenever a bona fide man-eater has made his appearance. This does not, of course, prevent such an animal from being a scourge, and his career, usually a short one, should be shortened as much as possible. By all means give a really large reward for the head of any such malefactor; but the ordinary tiger is harmless to human beings, and there is a good deal to be said in his favour as a friend of the agriculturist. Tigers, as a race, moreover, are probably credited, through the natural instinct for exaggeration, with far more loss of life than they actually occasion. Mr. Simson, a retired civilian, who has just published his experiences of twenty-five years' sport in Lower Bengal, believes that leopards in this part of the world are more destructive. He came across numerous cases of deaths and injuries said to have been caused by tigers which proved to be by leopards. But he never met a case attributed to a leopard which proved to be a tiger.

NAVAL AND MILITARY GAZETTE.

EVERY SATURDAY. PRICE SIXPENCE.

The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette has acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent course of its staff of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A series of Illustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" freely opens its correspondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for interchange of opinion is afforded, such as is offered by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supplements."

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" circulates largely throughout India and the Colonies. It is supplied direct to the Army and Marine bureaux of the French, Russian, and other Governments, and it is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Services, especially of the German, French, and American Armies, who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.

OPINIONS.

The Calcutta Review for October reached us a day or two ago, and a glance at its contents shows that the number more than sustains the reputation which this old and favourite publication is again achieving. The Review is rapidly regaining the position which it ... there is no fear of the Indian Review, or the Asiatic Quarterly rivalling it in public favour.—Statesman, October, 1886.

... The best service which I ever rendered in India, or, indeed, for India, was the establishment, single-handed, of the Calcutta Review, which has done far more for Indian literature than anything I have written under my own name.—J. W. KAYE, Athenæum Club, June 23, 1872.

The Calcutta Review has given us valuable articles on the army. Some from the pen of Sir Henry Lawrence, who wrote with the spirit of prophecy, of the coming storm of which he was one of the noblest victims.—Address of the C-in-C. at the U.S. Inst. of India.

... The Calcutta Review has not only throughout its career reflected the highest honour on its public-spirited promoters and its well-known distinguished contributors, but has done much to help forward the reconstruction of our system of governing India.—Westminster Review.

 SUMMARY OF ARTICLES IN FOREIGN SERVICE MAGAZINES.

LONDON: W. H. ALLEN & CO., 13, WATERLOO PLACE.

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

A MAGAZINE THAT GIVES EXPRESSION TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF THE PEOPLE OF INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing MONTHLY (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally dulle and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

SKETCHES.

Sir Alexander Burnes—Dr. James Burnes—Sir Henry Lawrence—John Russell Colvin—Brig.-General James George Neill—Major-General W. F. Beaton—Colonel William Henry Sykes, M.P.—Major-General W. H. Miller—Major-General Albert Pyche—Sir Arthur Purves Phayre—Sir John William Kaye—Sir Owen Tudor Burne—The Princes—Sir Bartle Frere—Sir Henry Anderson—Sir Henry Rawlinson—Sir Robert Montgomery—Sir Richard Temple—General Sir Donald Stewart—Major-General Sir William Hill—Sir William Andrew—Sir Julian Danvers—and others in the Appendices.

There is also an Account of Anglo-Indian Periodical Literature, and a brief Sketch of Sporting Literature in India, in which many well-known and distinguished Anglo-Indians are mentioned.

The object of the above work (originally published in 1875) is to give, in a convenient form, sketches of some of the distinguished men who have materially assisted in building up the fabric of our Indian Empire. The London Press bestowed a considerable amount of praise on the former little volume, the Standard remarking that it should have been twice the size; while the Friend of India said that "every Anglo-Indian should read" what a London journal styled "a deeply interesting volume."

*The sketches have now been more than doubled.

LIFE OFSIR HENRY RAE BURN, R.A.

With Portraits and Appendix by his Great-Grandson,

WILLIAM RAE BURN ANDREW.Even to look and handle this volume is an enjoyment —nor is the fair external promise believed by its contents. This brief memoir of the most eminent Scottish portrait painter is agreeably and profitably reading.—
*Whitehall Review.*This book is the first separate "Life of Raeburn," and besides being a good sketch of his career as far as it goes, contains a list of his works exhibited in Edinburgh in 1876.—*Contemporary Review.*Mr. Andrew writes about "the Reynolds of the North" with all that zealous warmth of appreciation which is due from a Scotchman to a Scotchman, a warmth which grows still more fervid when its object is an ancestor.
—*Athenaeum.*Mr. Andrew does justice to the manliness and amiability of Raeburn's character, and gives us some delightful glimpses of his intercourse with many of the

MONDAY, JANUARY 24, 1887.

General Intelligence.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 7th January; from Allahabad and Madras to the 5th January; and from Calcutta to the 4th January.

DETAILS, which, however, have already been received in England by wire, are given of the terrible fire in the People's Park, Madras, on New Year's Eve, which resulted in the loss of so many lives. The belief in India is that the fire was the work of incendiaries.

A FUND for the relief of the sufferers has been opened at Madras, and has been largely subscribed to.

THE Queen and the Viceroy have telegraphed to the Governor of Madras expressing their sympathy for the sufferers by the catastrophe.

ON New Year's Day there was the usual parade at all large military stations in honour of the Proclamation of Her Majesty the Queen as Empress of India. At Poona the troops were commanded by H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught.

H.E. THE GOVERNOR AND LADY REAY have left Bombay for Kurrachee. During his stay in Sind the Governor will visit Shikarpur, Jacobabad, Sukkur, Kotree, and Hyderabad, and will pay flying visits to Bhuj and Mandvi on the way back from Kurrachee to Bombay.

LIEUT. R. L. B. CARTER, 28th Regiment Bombay N.I., met with a fatal accident whilst travelling by the mail train from Bombay to Baroda on the evening of the 3rd inst.

ON the 30th ult. the Viceroy, in replying to an address presented to him at Calcutta by the Indian Association, referred to the question of administrative reform, and with regard to the question of Native volunteering said that Government, whilst recognising the loyalty and patriotism which prompted the demand for Native corps, found that the difficulties and disadvantages attending the scheme altogether outnumbered and outweighed the military and practical advantages.

THE COUNTESS OF DUFFERIN has issued a special appeal to the public for subscriptions to the Medical Women for India Fund, in honour of the Queen's Jubilee.

A NEW hospital, erected by the members of the Scottish Presbyterian Mission from funds collected in England and elsewhere, was opened by the Maharana of Oodeypore on the 28th ult.

MR. ANDERSON, Inspecting Veterinary Surgeon, Bombay Army, whilst travelling between Wankaneer and Rajkote in Kattywar in a bullock cart early on the 26th ult., was attacked, maltreated, and robbed by Mekrani outlaws.

TELEGRAMS received in Bombay represent that the Roman Catholics of Ceylon under the Guanese jurisdiction are greatly dissatisfied at the settlement with regard to the Padroado, and are prepared to resist the Papal Delegate.

It is intimated that the Queen's Jubilee will be celebrated in India on the 16th proximo.

LORD BRASSEY's well-known yacht, the Sunbeam, under the command of its owner, arrived in Bombay harbour on Monday about the same time as the mail steamer Thames, which brought out Lady Brassey and her three daughters, the Earl and Countess of Aberdeen, and the Earl of Buckinghamshire. The Sunbeam has left Bombay for Kurrachee.

AN arrangement has been come to between the Ceylon and Indian Post Offices, whereby correspondence may be exchanged between the two countries at the ordinary inland postage rates prevailing in either country.

SIR ROBERT FOWLER, ex-Lord Mayor of London, has arrived at Madras from Australia on a visit to the Governor.

REPORTS in Peshawur state that the Ameer's General at Jellalabad, Gholam Haidar Khan, intends operating against the Shinwarees for their repeated raids and disobedience to the Ameer's orders. The Khuggianees have also given some trouble during the past month.

It is notified in the Gazette of India that the Viceroy and Governor-General is pleased, on the representation of the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-West, "to permit the title of 'Honourable' to be borne by the members of his Honour's Legislative Council." An absurd rumour has been prevalent that this was not to be the case.

THE most important item of news received from Upper Burma during the past week is that a column under Major Jeffreys, General Lockhart's Brigade-Major, has surprised and killed the Kyemendine Prince, who has long been one of the buttresses of the insurrection in the Sittang Valley, besides capturing or putting to the sword almost all his adherents. After his narrow escape from General Lockhart, the Prince is likely to have been especially wary and cautious in his movements. But that has not prevented him from being hunted down by Major Jeffreys, and his fate, coupled with the last dispersal of Hla-Oo's following at the hands of Colonel Fitzgerald, is bound to produce a deep impression. Next in importance is the intelligence of the occupation of the Ruby Mines District, without opposition, on the 27th ult., and the reported surrender of Hla-Oo to the Deputy Commissioner of Sagain.

THERE have been the usual petty affairs with dacoits, in about two-thirds of which the latter were the assailants. In each of these our loss was about one man and one horse wounded per skirmish, and the enemy were repulsed with loss. In the remaining one-third of the actions our troops were the aggressors. The enemy were on each occasion cut to pieces, with losses varying from fifteen to nineteen killed; and a few prisoners, elephants, and some arms were captured. A number of dacoits confined in a cage at Kyonpyaw, in the Bassein district of Lower Burma, have managed to escape while food was brought to them. They took away a number of sniders and muzzle-loaders, and a quantity of ammunition belonging to their guard. At the time of the occurrence only two of the police guard appear to have been present, and, as no mention is made of anyone being hurt, the resistance offered by these two was probably not stubborn. An attack was made on a police tannah in the Pegu District on the 23rd ultimo by twenty dacoits. The little garrison of eight constables, however, beat off their assailants, killing three and wounding one, while they themselves lost two killed and three wounded.

MR. GLADSTONE, of the Punjab Civil Service, Assistant Commissioner, Mungyan district, has been shot through the thigh by dacoits.

OBITUARY.—Lieutenant-Colonel R. C. Whiting, Retired List, formerly of the 11th Bengal N.I., and of late in command of the troops of H.H. the Maharajah of Sirinoor; Lieutenant R. L. B. Carter, Adjutant 28th Bombay N.I., and Station Staff Officer, Baroda.

THE post of Surgeon in the Goculdas Tejpal Hospital has been given to Surgeon-Major Parakh. Dr. Arnott has been officiating in the appointment since Dr. Cook's departure, and would have been confirmed, but that he preferred to return to his chair in the Grant Medical College,

Notes of the Week.

THE appointment of Mr. Robert Hardie, Secretary and Treasurer to the Bank of Bengal, to be a member of the Council of India in the room of the late Mr. J. R. Bullen Smith, will doubtless be a surprise to many who had been speculating in their minds as to how the vacancy would be filled up. Several names were mentioned in Anglo-Indian circles, and Mr. Hardie's was not amongst them, but there can be no question as to his fitness for the post. Able, zealous, and holding broad and sound views on Indian questions, his presence at the Council Board will bring strength—especially where the Council has for some time been weak—in its financial operations between England and India.

It is likely enough that some disappointment will be expressed or felt in Bombay that Her Majesty has not seen fit to appoint some distinguished Civilian of that Presidency or some one more directly connected with the trade and commerce of Bombay to the vacancy, and it seems to outsiders somewhat strange that Bombay should remain unrepresented directly in the Council; but Mr. Hardie knows the wants and wishes of Bombay well, and these are not likely to suffer by any vote of his.

THE appointment of Mr. J. B. Lyall, now Resident in Mysore, to the Lieutenant-Governorship of the Punjab will also be a surprise to the many who made certain that Sir Lepel Griffin was to be Sir C. Aitchison's successor. The Times telegram states that the news appears to give general satisfaction in the Country of the Five Rivers, and this, to a certain extent, is no doubt true. Mr. Lyall is socially popular, and, in diplomatic language, may be called a safe man. Sir Lepel has amongst certain Englishmen in India who do not understand him some very like enemies, and he has the courage of his opinions, which is a courage sometimes dreaded at supreme headquarters. But he would have ruled the Punjab wisely and well, intimately acquainted as he is with its chiefs and peoples, and with whom his personal influence was always great.

ACCORDING to the telegram Sir Lepel Griffin will become Chief Commissioner in Burma if Sir C. Bernard takes furlough, which he probably will do. Burma wants a strong ruler, and certainly will obtain one in Sir Lepel, should he accept the post. It would be a perversion of the truth to say that Sir Charles Bernard has been a success in Burma, although he brought zeal and energy and the very best intentions to the difficult and ungracious task he had to perform. But the situation was too much for him. Burma was too hot to be paved with even the very best intentions. The task now before Sir Lepel Griffin, if he takes it in hand, will be, perhaps, easier, but it is still surrounded with difficulties, and it is possible that he may prefer not to accept it. He would not fear it. But he may have other ambitions.

LORD DUFFERIN appears to be winning over to his side the Native Press, notwithstanding the very sharp rebuke he administered in his speech at Poona to some of its representatives. One journal, which made itself notorious by its venomous criticisms upon his lordship's administration regarding the Natives of India, has now discovered "a new and hitherto unsuspected feature" in the character of the Viceroy—viz., that he has a kind heart! "If," says the journal in question, "his Excellency keeps on trusting at least as much to his heart as to his head in his dealings with the Indian people, he will soon find himself little liable to be betrayed into false situations, as little liable to be misunderstood, and always in a position to inspire the confidence, as well as command the best qualities of an intelligent and thoughtful people."

THE above extract may serve to point a moral to those agitators at home who are doing all in their power to make it appear that the Natives of India are groaning under a harsh and unsympathetic British rule. The vernacular Press has its fits of loyalty as well as of disloyalty—it vilifies English authority one day, and honours it the next. This may be characteristic of instability of mind and purpose, but it shows that the Bengalis are not to be depended upon for the purposes of revolution. They will be found as difficult to "rouse to vengeance" as was Canning's needy knife-grinder.

THEY have to be sometimes humoured, and sometimes chided as children, but Lord Dufferin does wisely in not treating them merely as "children crying in the night, and with no language but a cry." He is gaining their confidence by taking them into his, and showing that it is the honest desire of the Government of which he is the head to help towards the fulfilment of all their legitimate aspirations towards taking part in the system of administration under which they now are. But he has told them some plain truths, and shown a firmness in resisting the pressure of "irresponsible chatter" which cannot fail to have good effect in the end.

THE returns of the land trade of British India with foreign countries for the first six months of the financial year show that its value was 6,12,91,021 rupees, against 5,66,08,033 rupees last year. The return of imports shows a slight decrease, but that of exports a considerable increase. There was a falling off in the trade with Beyla, Cashmere, Upper Burma, Karennee, Zimmé, and Siam, but an increase in that with Khelat, Seistan, Cabul, Nepaul, and Sikhim.

LATEST INTELLIGENCE.

(BY TELEGRAPH.)

(Times Correspondents.)

INDIA.

CALCUTTA, JAN. 23.

Public meetings called in order to concert measures for celebrating the Queen's Jubilee have been held in almost every town of any importance in India during the last week. The Calcutta meeting, held on Wednesday, a brief account of which I have already telegraphed, was one of the largest and most widely representative ever held in the city. Resolutions were proposed and loyal speeches were delivered by, among others, the Lieutenant-Governor, the Nawab Bahadur of Moorsheadabad, the Maharajah of Cooch-Behar, the president of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce, the chairman of the Calcutta municipality, the master of the Trade Association, Dr. Hunter, Dr. Rajendra Lal Mitter, the Maharajahs Sir Jotendra Mohun Tagore and Norendra Krishna, the Honourable Peary Mohun Mookerjee, Baboo Surendro Nath Bannerjee, Prince Ferokh Shah, Nawab Abdool Lutef, and Mr. Ameer Ali. It was resolved that the Viceroy should be asked to receive a loyal address from various public bodies on the afternoon of the 16th of February, that the town and shipping should be illuminated in the evening, that other appropriate rejoicings should be held, and that a Jubilee fund should be raised for the purpose of commemorating the occasion in a suitable and permanent manner, the exact nature of the memorial to be settled thereafter. Among the various schemes suggested perhaps the best, and the one most likely to obtain general support, is a building of a Victoria Hospital for Women. Bombay has also determined to have a permanent memorial, and the Governor has expressed a wish that it should take the form of a Victoria Technical Institute. He offers on certain terms to grant 25,000 rupees annually. Meetings at Madras, Allahabad, Lahore, Rangoon, and many other cities have also resolved to testify their loyalty by festivities and memorials, and it may be confidently anticipated that the whole of India will be en fête on February 16 and 17, and that a number of useful institutions of various kinds will soon rise throughout the country as lasting memorials of the occasion. Possibly the Hooghly railway bridge may be open, and the first train from Upper India may run into Calcutta on the Jubilee day.

The Bengal committee of the Public Service Commission has continued its sittings during the past week, but few witnesses have presented themselves as yet, and the examination of the more important of them is being reserved till the main body of the Commission arrives here in February. The evidence taken so far is for the most part adverse to the present system of selection for the statutory Native Civil Service. The president and other members of the Commission are still in Bombay, where a great mass of evidence has been taken representing many different views. One of the most important witnesses, Mr. Lee Warner, acting secretary to the Government, expressed an opinion that the direction of the administration should be intrusted to a small service composed exclusively of Englishmen, and that all other posts should be reserved for persons coming within the statutory definition of "Natives of India."

It is understood that the Government has accepted the recommendations of the Finance Committee regarding provincial contracts, and that the next Budget will show a saving in this account of about 50 lakhs. It is believed that large reductions will also be made in what is called the Simla allowance—that is, the extra sums given to various officials who accompany the Government to and from Simla annually. Those allowances have hitherto been granted on a most lavish scale, and sometimes in the case of subordinate clerks they equal or even exceed an officer's yearly salary.

The uncertainty regarding Sir C. Aitchison's successor as Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab has been set at rest by the announcement of the appointment of Mr. J. B. Lyall, now Resident in Mysore. Mr. Lyall served for many years in the Punjab, where he held several posts of high importance. The news appears to give general satisfaction in that province. Sir Lepel Griffin, who for some months has been spoken of as likely to be selected, will now, it is believed, become Chief Commissioner in Burma if Sir C. Bernard should take furlough.

Some interesting experiments were tried on Monday in the river Hooghly, a few miles below Calcutta, with a view of testing the practicability of defending the approaches to the port against a hostile fleet by submarine mines. Various kinds of mines were used, some being fired by contact, others by means of electricity from the shore. The experiments passed off successfully, and may be taken to demonstrate that Calcutta can easily be made invulnerable against a naval attack.

From time to time the Indian newspapers contain accounts of extraordinary rumours and panics which break out among the Natives in different parts of the country, and which serve to show how small has been the effect of Western civilisation on the lower orders. One of these unreasoning scares is now prevailing in Calcutta. A rumour has got abroad that the Government has issued a mysterious order forbidding Natives to appear in the streets after nine o'clock at night on pain of death, and several stories are widely circulated and believed of the infliction of the death penalty with horrible circumstances. It is impossible to trace the origin of the rumour, but it appears to have affected even the servants of European households, and to have caused a general dread among the Natives of passing certain localities after dark.

The news from the Assam frontier seems to point to a renewal of the old standing feud between the Jaboha and Banpara Nagas, a Banpara man and a woman having been seized by the Jabohas at Bhogburid and murdered. The Banparas are appealing to the Government for protection.

Dewan Lutchman Doss has been appointed Prime Minister of Cashmere. This step on the part of the Maharajah is generally commended.

AFGHANISTAN.

A Calcutta newspaper states that the Ghilzais have made a successful attack on the Ameer's troops near Mukkur. The story is not confirmed, and the most recent news is to the effect that the weather is such as to prevent all warlike operations. It seems certain, however, that the Ghilzai insurrection is still smouldering, and that it is likely to break out afresh in the spring.

BURMA.

MANDALAY, JAN. 22.

Mr. Burgess, accompanied by some cavalry, has made a forced march on Woontho, arriving there on the afternoon of the 16th inst. They were well received by the inhabitants. Brigadier-General Cox, with some mounted infantry, reached Woontho on the 18th.

The Shwebo column has reached Kawlin, and holds the country between the latter place and Woontho.

Mandalay continues in a very orderly state.

The action of the Bombay Government in instituting quarantine at Aden and Perim against arrivals from Bombay seems, says the Pioneer, most uncalled for. It is the doctrine of many English men of science—and the practice of the English Government is modelled thereon—that against the dissemination of cholera quarantine is not the slightest use. If there was any cholera at Bombay, or if there was any more cholera in any part of India at the present moment than there was months ago, there might be some excuse for the inhibition. But while Great Britain, who suffers most from quarantine regulations in any part of the world, and especially in the Canal or the Red Sea, is endeavouring to persuade foreign nations to disbelieve in the efficiency of quarantine, it is hard that without any palpable reason the authorities of Bombay should give their support to the contrary opinion.

ANGLO-INDIAN PRESS.

THE DEFENCES OF BOMBAY.

(Times of India.)

Allowing, therefore, that India must be considered, in the present condition of affairs, as a continental State, the protection of her harbours presents at the outset a problem requiring to be solved in an extremely thorough manner. It is useless to protect them with the ordinary means employed for small and comparatively unimportant places, for the capture of any large Indian port by an enemy would completely alter the conditions of a campaign. Instead of being able to supply army corps for exterior use, England would have to turn her whole strength against the invader, and drive him at once from her shores. To fail, or even to delay, in this would be fatal to our prestige, for it would excite all the discontented elements in the peninsula to attempt a rising, and fan into flame every smouldering ember of discord. Possibly our hold on India is too firm to be shaken by any such means, for the British peace means wealth and prosperity to those living under her flag, but the effort to right ourselves would be considerable, and would at least occupy the attention of the whole army, and render India practically of no account in any European complication. With India thrown, so to speak, out of action, England would have to rely solely on her own resources, and, though those would probably prove sufficient for her needs, yet the end could not be accomplished without the expenditure of more than ten times the sum that would be required to replace the harbour in a thorough state of defence. France, at the present moment, is prepared to spend millions of francs in placing steel cupolas on her Eastern frontier, although she has already strong fortresses, and it is absolutely necessary to bring the defences of a nation up to the level of any possible attack, as any half-hearted measures simply involve a great expenditure of money with no corresponding result to show for it. Weak defences are worse than none, for, where there are no defences, the enemy is met in the open field, and treated on an entirely different footing; whereas weak defences are often relied on with disastrous results. Steel cupolas may, perhaps, be too ambitious a scheme for Bombay, but it is surely not too much to ask that the guns on our defences should be of the most powerful pattern procurable.

The heaviest guns at present mounted on the Bombay Harbour defences are rifled muzzle-loading guns of 38 tons weight with a bore of 12½ inches. Their extreme range for efficiency is not more than 6,000 yards, and the fact that they fire the old pattern studded shell so greatly decreases their accuracy that it is doubtful whether they could be relied on to hit a moving object at that distance. Such a gun is not only too feeble for the work required of it, but hardly accurate enough to be the sole defence of an important harbour. A range of 6,000 yards, though considerable for land fighting, is very little on a sea front, where the object is to prevent hostile ships carrying powerful guns from approaching near enough to shell the town. Nearly all the Continental war-ships of the first class carry more powerful guns than these; and breech-loaders are always more accurate than muzzle-loaders firing studded shell, owing to the more perfect centring of the projectile in the bore of the gun. Compare for a moment our heavy gun with the corresponding French gun. The French "De Bange" rifled breech-loading steel gun weighs 37 tons, has a calibre of 13 inches, and throws a projectile weighing 1,200 lbs. to a distance of over ten miles. A range of 18,000 yards (just over ten miles) is exactly three times as great as that of the Indian gun. The shell of the "De Bange" gun starts at a velocity of 2,130 feet per second, and would have a remaining velocity of over 900 feet per second at a range of 6,000 yards, the extreme limit of the muzzle-loader's power. Guns should always be of a power proportionate to the work they have to do, and those on a sea front especially require range. We do not for a moment assert that the guns we have on the defences were not the best procurable at the time that they were ordered, but so great a change has lately been effected in designing heavy ordnance that these weapons have quite fallen behind the times. As an auxiliary line of defence they will be most valuable, but if we are to rely chiefly on our guns for the defence of the harbour, as it seems we shall have to rely on them, it is imperative that a certain number of long-range hard-hitting and accurate weapons be procured. England is well abreast of Europe in her new pattern guns, and it seems anomalous that India cannot or will not afford the money necessary to ensure the thorough defence of her most exposed port.

TREATMENT OF BRITISH SOLDIERS IN INDIA.

(Englishman.)

It is well-known that His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief is an earnest reformer in all matters affecting the comfort and sensible treatment of the troops. While in Madras, he showed that his zeal in this direction was of an exceedingly practical character, and it may be hoped that he will yet be able to do for all India what he did with such excellent effect in the Southern Presidency. There is certainly an ample field for reform. The contrast that is presented by various Corps in respect of criminal offences is a standing subject of remark. All are under the same Regulations, and there is but one Mutiny Act, and yet Corps differ in this respect in the most striking manner. But the secret lies to a great extent in the system under which the "interior economy of Corps is managed," the Regimental Commanders being left to follow their own lights in the reading of the Regulations. The latitude thus left to the Commanding officer has a most important bearing not only on the criminal record, but on the means that are adopted to reduce crime, and to safeguard the rank and file from acts of indiscretion. An instance will serve to illustrate the diversity of opinion on the subject that exists in various Corps equally bent on maintaining their efficiency.

Two regiments are stationed in an out-of-the-way place in the maffal. The one allows its men great latitude in dress for the purpose of recreation and walking out. Belts need not be worn, the helmet is shorn of all its glittering glory so as to be as light as possible, and everything gives way to comfort, while smartness is still preserved. The other enforces the strictest orders on the subject, and the unfortunate soldier out for a casual stroll or amusement finds he has to array himself in every detail as if he were going to attend parade instead of to take recreation. So much does this press upon him as a hardship when he contrasts himself with his comfortably clad neighbor, that after a time the walk is abandoned as too much of a drudgery, and the wretched canteen loafing life is fallen back on in preference, simply because he is discouraged from taking healthy exercise and procuring change of scene and diversion. This arbitrary regimental rule of dress, perhaps, might be reasonable in the public thoroughfares of a fashionable town, but is quite as much out of place in a secluded Eastern cantonment as the discarded high hat and frock coat of the officer in mufti. But, further, this very order is frequently the cause of misdemeanour. The soldier out on a warm day finds the belt most uncomfortable outside his coat. For the sake of convenience he removes it, and places it underneath. He is met by one of his superiors, who observes the irregularity; and the following day he appears as a prisoner "for being improperly dressed out walking."

A crime is thus created in one Corps which could not possibly occur in the other, and that by a Regimental Regulation which presses very hard on those to whom it applies, and which is childish in the extreme. There are many ways in which the irksomeness of the service can be and is relieved in some regiments with the result of lessening crime. Some Corps enforce the system of having a roll-call four or five times a day. Only those who have gone through the ranks can realise fully what this means. Is it not sufficient to know that a soldier is present during the day? Unless he has some particular duty to perform, he might surely be allowed to enjoy his leisure instead of being disturbed repeatedly for the purpose of answering his name. The Native army does not resort to this practice to anything like the same extent, but has not found that crime is stimulated. The men turn out as readily when they are required, and during their particular feasts they have general leave as far as is compatible with the performance of the ordinary duties. They are not seen for several days together, and yet at the expiry of the time all are present.

There is another point which, though of great importance, appears to be too frequently ignored altogether, and that is the demarcation made between good and bad characters. The former should be encouraged to feel that they benefit materially by their steady conduct, and rules should be relaxed in their favour. The latter, on the other hand, should be made to feel the iron rod of discipline. The force of contrast would have a capital effect. A greater responsibility now rests upon all officers on account of the more general youthfulness of recruits. A harsh word is frequently the cause of making a young soldier disgusted with his efforts to be well behaved. Young non-commissioned officers more especially, it is to be feared, are apt to look upon all crime as the same, no matter by whom committed, and to make no distinction between the man who willingly and purposely does wrong and the youngster who is betrayed into a breach of discipline through want of knowledge. Idleness is the primary cause of most crime, and to create healthy employment and recreation should, therefore, be the object and aim of everyone who has the welfare of the army at heart. A comfortable and well-supplied reading and recreation-room should be the great opposing influence to the canteen during the long hours of the evening. Outdoor games and exercises should be encouraged to a greater extent. Every legitimate means should be adopted to discourage drinking, which is the bane of the army to-day almost to as great an extent as in the former generation. Society has advanced in this respect, but the army stands still, and until the troops learn to look down upon men of drunken habits any great reform of the army is impossible. It was left to a lady, Miss Robinson, to initiate and supply the means of providing amusement and recreation for the soldier in our large garrison towns, as a counter attraction to low resorts. It has fallen to the Rev. Mr. Gregson to take the lead in the struggle against the soldier's great enemy. It is sometimes alleged by way of excuse that the locality from which recruits are drawn has more to do with crime than their subsequent surroundings. But delinquent Corps will find it hard to excuse themselves when one considers the powers that are given to regimental authorities to deal with crime, and to work their own regulations. It is not, at least, an unfair judgment which holds that there is something wrong in a system where officers fail ignominiously in this essential part of their duty, and where others succeed to admiration.

THE MADRAS CHAMBER'S JUBILEE.

(Madras Mail.)

Regret has been expressed by several of our readers that we have not published an account of the banquet that was given at the Madras Club by the Madras Chamber of Commerce in celebration, at the conclusion of a mercantile holiday, of the jubilee of that important public body. It is forgotten that the club is a private institution in theory, and that in availing themselves of the courteous permission of the club to make use of the club rooms on the occasion referred to the members of the Chamber necessarily accepted the obligation of complying with the rules and regulations which were devised long ago for the conduct of the club. We are, therefore, in a position to mention no more than what is matter of common notoriety outside the club, among those who have not the privilege of being members of that institution. Or, to be quite on the safe side, we will merely quote the statement of the Times of India, that ninety-nine persons sat down; that the guests included the new Governor, the new Commander-in-Chief, with their staffs, the Judges of the High Court, the members of Council, the Bishop, the secretaries to Government, the members of the Board of Revenue, the heads of Departments, &c.; that the chair was taken by Mr. George Arbuthnot, Chairman of the Chamber, who is nephew of the late Mr. John Alves Arbuthnot, Chairman on the establishment of the Chamber; that the banquet was a brilliant success; and that the Governor made a most happy speech.

With a new Governor, a new Commander-in-Chief, a new Chief Justice, a new Member of Council, and a new Chief Secretary to Government present among the old pillars of this State the dinner is said to have had a peculiar interest. The celebration was a happy thought. The Chamber of Commerce does not often obtrude itself on public notice, yet it is instrumental in doing quietly a great deal of good public service. We happen to be rather well acquainted with an observant fly on the Chamber's wheel, and we are therefore in a position to say that the good understanding which was accentuated on that day by the presence of the whole official hierarchy in Madras at the Chamber's table did but reflect the kind feeling that has almost invariably existed between the mercantile and the official community of this city. The Chamber has the courage of its opinions, but it has for fifty years lived in almost perfect harmony with the Government. The friction between the late Administration and the Chamber in regard to the Harbour Trust was an exception to the general rule, but it showed, not that the Chamber was in error, but that the Administration was as ill-advised and as deficient in tact in its relations with the mercantile as it was with many other sections of the community. The Chamber has much cause to regard with respect the members of Government, the heads of Departments, and, generally speaking, all in authority, and the banquet was a graceful acknowledgment of the fact.

We all know, on the authority of the veracious and large-minded Pioneer, that Madras is a sink of iniquity, and that for a man, be he journalist or merchant, to speak anything but evil of local dignities, is to stamp him as a scoundrel of the deepest dye. Therefore we lay ourselves open to the charge of hugging our chains, when we say that in our opinion the sympathy that exists between non-officials and officials in Madras is very creditable to both classes. It was trade that brought the British to India, and it is trade that makes it worth their while to remain here. It is incumbent upon England to couple with the development of trade the material and moral progress of the people of India, but self-interest is the chief moving principle of nations as of individuals, and trade is the raison d'être of the Anglo-Indian empire. In Madras there is very little, if any, of that mistaken pride of office, which regards the votaries of trade with superciliousness. Whatever may be the case in Calcutta, Allahabad, and Bombay, it is not necessary to assure public functionaries in Madras with reference to merchants, that "These also are God's creatures." And the Club, of which Madras is justly proud, affords remarkable proof of the absence of the old official prejudice against men not in the public service. It is by universal admission the best of all clubs in Asia, and this is not a little due to its unexclusiveness. It owed its establishment and early success mainly to officials; and as officials preponderate in Madras, it might have been strictly maintained as an official club, just as the Reform and Carlton Clubs in London are reserved for Liberals and Conservatives respectively. But for many years the club has admitted not only partners of mercantile firms and managers of banks, but youthful commercial assistants moving in general society, who would not yet be eligible for election at the Bengal or Byculla Clubs. This, probably, has had a good deal to do with that happy blending of the official and non-official elements of Madras society which excites the admiration of the Bengalee and Bombayite within our gates. Cliques are regarded as bad form in Madras, and good fellowship is the rule, not the exception. The Chamber did well, then, to employ the occasion of the completion of the first half century of its existence by honouring those with whom it has been most frequently brought into official contact. The only regret, we are told, that the persons who were present at the festive function referred to feel with regard to it is, that the Chamber will not have another Jubilee (completing its centenary) to celebrate until the year 1936.

CAVALRY MANŒUVRES IN INDIA.

(Bombay Gazette.)

The military authorities in India are giving practical evidence of their appreciation of the place of cavalry in modern warfare. During next month some cavalry manœuvres on a small scale will take place at Mhow, and at Sibi General Luck will shortly superintend the manœuvres of a brigade of cavalry consisting of the 5th, 6th, and 7th Bombay Regiments. There is no doubt as to the importance of getting cavalry to learn to work together, and of accustoming them to take part in extended movements. This, of course, can only be accomplished by the bringing together of regiments for the sake of combined manœuvres. It was rather common some years ago to hear it said that the introduction of rapid firing of long range arms of precision had done away with the utility of cavalry in modern war, and that its importance as an arm had in consequence very much decreased. The campaign of 1866, from the use—or rather from the want of use—that was made of cavalry seemed rather to bear out this idea. During that short campaign the cavalry divisions were always in rear, and the enormous advantage which might have ensued from the proper use of this arm was thrown away. Fortunately there were men in the Prussian army who saw this, and the lesson then learnt was found of practical value in the Franco-Prussian war. In the first stage of this war certainly the cavalry played no great part, for certain reasons into which it is needless to enter here. But in the advance on the Moselle the true value of it was shown, and it was worked to the utmost. Thrown forward to a great distance from the advancing army, the cavalry covered its onward progress, secured it quiet—which of all things is the most important when troops are marching—and obtained accurate information of the movements of the enemy, driving back their advanced troops. The Prussian Cavalry on this occasion had every advantage, as the French Cavalry were badly organised, badly equipped, and badly drilled, and were thoroughly worsted. We may fairly anticipate, however, that in the event of a campaign between any two great European Powers there will be a series of general engagements between the cavalry, and cavalry alone, of the opposing forces, while the main bodies of the approaching armies are from forty to fifty miles distant from each other. This must be so if both sides use this arm so as to get the best work out of it. Immediately on an army taking the field the cavalry in very large force will be thrown some two days' march in advance, and they will find their rôle is not to reconnoitre but to fight. The enemy's cavalry must be prevented breaking through the screen to obtain information, and on the other hand every endeavour must be made to drive back and break through the opposing force. This will lead to a series of actions, many of course minor ones, but some with very considerable bodies engaged, and success or otherwise in these engagements may have a very great effect on the subsequent operations and their results. Not only too in the advance opposed only to cavalry is cavalry valuable. In a general action the proper and judicious management of the cavalry, not recklessly exposing it and not needlessly screening it, will secure considerable advantage. Attacking Infantry strongly threatened on a flank by well-handled cavalry must be to a certain extent checked, giving time to the defenders to bring up reinforcements, or if advisable to retire to a more secure position, or to inflict a crushing loss on the attacking force, possibly altering its formation in part to meet the threatening cavalry. There is no arm which requires such rapidity of thought and judgment to command well. The eye, the mind, and the voice must on many occasions be nearly simultaneous in their action, and this, of course, can only be obtained by very considerable practice, and it is precisely in moving about anything more than a regiment that our senior cavalry officers are, through no fault of their own, deficient. We may justly consider that in equipment, horses, riding, and men, our cavalry, both European and Native, is second to none. Of course our Native regiments are essentially light regiments, especially as regards their horses, when compared with the English regiments and those of continental nations, other than the Cossacks of Russia. But we have undoubtedly a magnificent cavalry force, though not trained as it ought to be. With the regimental drill we have little to complain of. Some corps, of course, are a great deal better than others in this respect, as must be the case in any army, but probably in brigade drill there is a falling off, and in large and extensive movements, with a considerable force of cavalry, we cannot be good, as our regiments are very seldom brought together for this purpose, and our generals never have a chance of working out manœuvres on a large scale. The little camp about to take place at Mhow is a step, though a very small one, in the right direction. Three regiments—the 7th Dragoon Guards, the 3rd Bombay Cavalry and a regiment of the Central India Horse, with a battery of Horse Artillery—will be brought together for some three weeks. A good many days will be devoted to purely cavalry work, drill in brigade, in division, and field manœuvres, the programme ending with a combined reconnaissance by the three regiments over a very considerable extent of country, the advance lasting three days. This last should be most excellent practice; the keeping up of the touch over the many miles of front covered, the rapid transmission of intelligence to the commander of the force, and the judicious use of the horses—all should combine to make it an interesting lesson to those concerned. It is believed that H.R.H. the Commander-in-Chief will be at Mhow for a week of these manœuvres. He will see there one of the best horsed Native Cavalry regiments in India, the 3rd Bombay Cavalry, who also can show a fine record of war service. The Central India Horse, too, is a crack corps, and has always been noted for smartness and efficiency. It will be a good day for the Military world out here when many more than three regiments can meet together for annual manœuvres. The present system of splitting up our army into numerous small garrisons must, of course, militate very materially against anything of the kind; but this may some day be remedied. Military writers have urged again and again that the raison d'être of numerous small garrisons has long since passed away. The true road to efficiency in the field is concentration in garrison. Let our generals have a chance of handling men in peace as they must do in case of war. How many generals are there in India at this moment who have ever controlled, even on a parade ground, the movements of 6,000 men of all arms, or even of half that number? Hardly one, we should say. However, we must hope that time will mend this most striking defect in our military system.

THE NEW YEAR'S HONOURS.

(Bombay Gazette.)

The list of New Year's honours is shorter and rather less important than usual, probably because there will be an abnormally abundant exercise of Imperial favour later on in celebration of the Jubilee of Her Majesty's accession. The most distinguished recipient of the Companionship of the Order of the Indian Empire is Mr. Colman Macaulay, who went to Peking to arrange for going to Thibet, but who nevertheless has not gone to Thibet out of regard for Chinese fears of provoking the susceptibilities of the Thibetans. Mr. Macaulay is singularly fortunate in that he has won his honours by a campaign that never came off. The bestowal of the same decoration upon Mr. Pestonjee Hormusjee Cama is an appropriate confirmation of the eulogy which Lord Reay passed upon him at the opening of the Cama Hospital. Mr. Cama has so lavishly laid out his substance for the benefit of the community that he well deserves a place amongst those who for their munificence have been deemed worthy of the favour of the Crown. Dr. Kielhorn, who is also made a C.I.E., has held as distinguished a place in the Bombay Education Department as high proficiency in Oriental scholarship could earn for him. He is the only other local recipient of this distinction, unless we reckon as a near neighbour Mr. J. L. Kipling of Lahore, who has too many friends in this part of India to be deemed quite a stranger. No one who has been admitted into this honourable and comprehensive Companionship is more deserving of it through meritorious service than he. The presence of Mr. Kipling's name in the list will warrant the public in anticipating that a similar recognition will ere long be paid to Mr. Griffiths, of the Bombay School of Art, who has done very excellent work in that institution, and whose labours for the representation of the art products of this Presidency at the recent Exhibition and others have been as arduous and as valuable as they have been, we believe, unrequited. Amongst those upon whom the minor decorations have been conferred, there is no one more worthy of the compliment than Mr. Bechardas Viharidas Desai, of Nariad, whose skilled and energetic efforts for promoting the agricultural prosperity of his district we have often recorded. The economic well-being of India would be assured if there were a Bechardas in every district.

A COCKNEY DELUSION.

The Civil and Military Gazette writes sensibly and strongly on the subject of a widespread hallucination about India and its treasures. It begins by remarking that India is at this moment overrun with tourists, many of whom, having seen the array of Indian arts and manufactures at the great Exhibition just closed, are anxious to procure similar specimens for themselves. They have been led to believe that our bazaars teem with rich and varied bric-à-brac, awaiting purchasers; that pottery, glowing with colour, arms encrusted with gold and mother-o'-pearl, embroideries stiff with gold thread and blizng with oriental fancies in rainbow tints, ivory and wood carvings, are everywhere to be found. It is unnecessary to say that they are grievously disappointed. French travellers are perhaps the loudest in their wail over the barrenness of the land. "I see nothing and am offered nothing, but the most trumpery pacotille, said an angry French gentleman the other day; "and yet I was told, and I have read that India is full of beautiful things." The truth is that this country has suffered a grievous wrong from writers who have tried to atone for their ignorance of the actualities of Indian life, by quoting ancient poetry and writing descriptions, touched with a light that never was on sea and land, which are none the less humbug because they have some of "the consecration and the poet's dream." Sir George Birdwood is an arch-offender in this respect, and one can well imagine a disappointed tourist addressing him with a few pungent remarks on his Industrial Arts of India, something in this style:—"You are welcome to be as enthusiastic as you like over a country of which you have only seen a very small corner, but why did you say it was occupied by a 'vast population of art-workmen,' and that 'in every Indian village all the traditional handicrafts are still to be found at work.' I have now seen a great many Indian houses, and I don't hesitate to characterise your assertion that 'every house in India is likewise a nursery of the beautiful' as pure nonsense; I have also seen a vast number of Indian people, and am convinced that when you say—there is a universally diffused popular appreciation of technical skill and taste in workmanship' you say that which is a long way from the truth. And when you talk of the grey and dingy village life of the country as glowing in colour like 'Titian's canvas and moving like the stately procession of the Panathænic frieze,' you convey an absolutely false impression. You have, in short, depicted an ideal India, which is as much like the life as a pantomime transformation scene representing Olympus, is like Shoreditch on a Saturday night." This expression of feeling would not perhaps greatly console the tourist, or gratify the learned writer on Indian art; but it is the best consolation we have to offer to a large number of ladies and gentlemen now engaged in a fruitless search for "pretty things."

A VISION OF STRANGE QUESTIONINGS.

A FRAGMENT.

Last night I pondered o'er the Problems set
By Wise men in the East, until my brain
Grew fluid in the effort, and my thoughts
Wandered, all wayward, to the national dish
"Olla podrida" of far distant Spain.
So, memory waking, took me back once more
To dim cathedral isles, where, curtained high Above an altar hung a picture called—
I think—"The Assumption of St. Charles,"
A figure in the clouds! On either hand
Rising to Heaven or sinking down to Hell
Good men or bad. Then drowsily I seemed
To find familiar faces in the crowd;
To see a hidden meaning through it all,
And dozing, found myself amongst the goats.
Not being black faced, like the happy sheep.
At last I slept, and as I slept, I dreamed.

* * * *

And lo! all things were Chaos. Far and near
A dim, dark sea of wind-born waves that roared
And leapt high heavenward, like clamouring mouths,
Full of strange questionings and vague desires
And neath the din, the piteous cries of babes
Widowed ere life began, and hideous howls
Of nameless evils, and the hungry cry
Of peasants ruined by false credit. These Smote on the ear unnoticed or forgot,
While, like a pale star in a stormy sky,
Set in the East the Vanishing Rupee.

* * * *

Then Silence sank, and Light diffused remote,
Swept onward to a centre, till the eye
Grew blind with brightness, and I scarce could see
A figure, like a fating of the flock,
That sang aloud, and as it sang it danced.
Its head was crowned with an embroidered cap,
Its feet were shod with patent leather shoes,
And round its neck in mystic coil it wore
A knitted comforter of many hues,
That floated like twin bell-pulls on the air:
It moved in rhythmic measure to the tune
Loved by street boys, where Tommy's asked to make Room for his Uncle. This is what it sang High, nasally, with trills off interlaced.

CHORIC SONG.

"I am the Chosen, the Elected
Of Shorter Catechisms
I'm the Ideal, the Perfected Beyond all criticisms.

I am a Wondrous Thing: conglomerate
Of Pass and good Position;
Of ignorance protected by the State
Of free, fair Competition.

Many a Mind has wrought to tinkler me,
Me, the Regenerative Link.
Say, Kosmos! say! What do you think of me,
What do you think the Natives think?"

But as it gyrated with lissome grace
And flashing feet, a spectral Hand loomed dark
Upon the luminous haze on either side,
And clutched the flying comforter and held
It fast with straining sinew. Then, as a top Dies down to death, the figure reeled and rocked E'en as it spun, while the fast tightening coil
Strangled the sweet song of the dying swan,
Till, with swift sidelong lurch, the vision plunged
To the unfathomable Abyss, and rose no more.

* * * *

Then once again the clamouring mouths found voice
But, quick as thought, the spectral Hands had grasped Similar, mace. And to them grew fierce forms;
One, with long hair beneath the sacred Quoit,
The other turbaned with the Holy green,
And crying, "Deen! Deen! Fateh! Mahomed!"
"Jai! Jai! Guraji! Jai!"—as ancient foes
Sprang at each other's throats.—I could not tell Which conquered: for a Shadow, vast and vague,
Crept from the distant hills; and bitter blasts,
Blown from dread snowfields where the polar Bear
Waits patient for his prey—freezing my vein
Numbed me to sleep: and a voice lulled mine ear;
Chanting triumphant "He who waits will win."
Then silence, as of Frozen Depths, or Death
Fell on the clamouring mouths and Piteous cries;
And so I slept, and as I slept, I snored.

BENGAL.

THE expenses incurred by the committee for the reception of the delegates to the National Congress at Calcutta are about Rs. 10,000.

THE Calcutta Bruce Institution is not at present attracting many candidates for admission. The first election takes place on the 7th of February, when Eurasian girls between the ages of five and ten will be placed on the foundation, preference being given to orphans and those who have been deserted by their parents.

A VERY interesting meeting took place on the 24th ult. to award the prizes and scholarships won during the past year in the Baugabasi School, Calcutta, the first institution in India which has endeavoured to combine a general education with thorough instruction in agriculture. Its two head-masters are distinguished graduates of the Calcutta University, who were sent home to England to study at the Royal Agricultural College at Cirencester, and who carried off the highest honours.

AN edifying state of things exists in a sub-division of Bengal, if we may believe the statements of a Calcutta Native paper. The first munsiff of the sub-division in question, a Native, is thus spoken of by a correspondent:—"From morning to evening and from evening to morning he is not, perhaps, sober for a minute. He is daily carried to the Cutcherry between two peons, and some one must make him hold his pen to sign any document."

M. G. GAUTHIER contributes an interesting article on Indian Sericulture to a Calcutta contemporary. M. Gauthier states that the majority of persons who have had to do with silk culture in India have been but imperfectly acquainted with the industry, and the results have been constant deception and the demoralisation, more and more complete every year, of the growers. India in olden times, he points out, gave favourable results in sericulture, and the right way to remedy the present evils is by the introduction of improved processes now well known and much appreciated in Europe. "Unfortunately," he continues, "the Indian silk trade is diminishing more and more rapidly every year. The disease exists here in the worst form, a fact which I ascertained by microscopical inspection in 1884 and 1885 of worms obtained from various Native growers. Since that period I have not had occasion to continue my experiments, but the complaints from the growery, which are worse every year, prove abundantly that if the Government does not devote its yearly attention to the means of facilitating reproduction by prompt and efficacious measures, and by supplies of good eggs, sericulture will disappear entirely from Bengal in a few years. It would, therefore, be well if Government would follow the example and the impetus which the French Government gave at the time when its silk-growing districts were much ravaged by disease, which at present, thanks to the Pasteur process, has entirely disappeared." With the advantages of cheap labour and a suitable climate she possesses, India, M. Gauthier says, might in time become the mistress of the silk trade.

MADRAS.

THE intensity of the fire at the Madras Fair may be gathered from the fact that many of the bodies were reduced to asher, and that vessels of brass were found melted.

A TELEGRAM from the Secretary of State addressed to the Governor conveys the sincere sympathy of Her Imperial Majesty for the victims in the late fire and their families.

DR. MILLER, of the Christian College, has addressed a long letter to the Madras Mail, asserting that from personal observation of the suspicious actions of Natives on the night of the fire he is convinced that the catastrophe was the result of a preconcerted scheme. Strict inquiries are to be made.

A RELIEF fund has been opened, Mr. Ramasawmy Moodelliar, the new Sheriff of Madras, subscribing one thousand rupees, and Messrs. Bliss and Whiteside, now on special duty in Calcutta, have each telegraphed to be placed on the list of subscribers.

GOVERNMENT have passed an order complimenting the medical staff on their prompt and effective measures for the relief of the sufferers.

RUMOURS were current that bodies had been found on the sea beach, but they are not confirmed. The whole Native population is in a state of great excitement, and all kinds of rumours as to the cause of the fire and the treatment of the dead and injured are current in the bazaar.

A MEETING of Roman Catholics was held in Madras on the 2nd instant for the purpose of making arrangements for the reception of Monsignor Agliardi, the Papal delegate, who is expected to arrive in Madras on the 15th instant.

THE question as to whether or not the Surgeon-General of Madras should accompany the local Government to the Hills has, it is stated, been decided in favour of his going, as it is thought that his presence is necessary at the headquarters of the Government. His establishment is, however, to be restricted, as a trial, to one clerk and one peon, who will draw allowances at the same rates as those prescribed for Secretariat establishments.

AS an outcome of the disastrous fire which occurred at Tinnevely on the 26th July last, resulting in such severe loss of life, the Madras Government has resolved upon taking the necessary steps for amending the District Municipalities Act so as to give power to municipal councils to regulate and control theatrical and other performances—a power which they do not possess under the Act as at present framed. In the meantime, with a view of guarding against the recurrence of catastrophes of the kind, Government circulated to all the chairmen of Municipal councils a letter received from Mr. Whiteside, in which he details the precaution which he took when Collector of North Arcot five or six years ago on the occasion of a Native performance being given.

BOMBAY.

IT is rumoured in Hyderabad that Mr. Cordery will take a couple of months' leave to escape from the coming hot weather, which he will spend at one of the Bombay hill stations.

THE first report on the prospects of the Bombay wheat crop, up to the end of November, is as follows:—"Estimates generally up to end of November. Season reported very favourable for wheat, though sowings unusually late, hence figures incomplete; area if anything larger than average in all parts, but not fully reported; hence detailed comparison not made. Latest intelligence: Cyclonic abnormal rain in Deccan and parts of the Carnatic about 10th December, were very heavy, must have done harm by flooding as in Ahmednagar, still seedlings too immature to be injured by rust, usually induced by December rain. No actual damage reported."

AN outrage by outlaws has occurred near Rajkote. As Mr. Anderson, V.S., was proceeding to that city the vehicle in which he was travelling was surrounded by outlaws, who fired four blunderbusses into it, and then striking at him with swords wounded him severely. They then dragged him out of his gharry and ill-used him, finally robbing him of all that he had, including his uniform, medals, and Rs. 300 in cash. They are believed to form part of a gang raiding from a neighbouring State.

THE first report on the prospects of the wheat, jowari, and linseed crop in Berar is as follows:—"Acreage under wheat above the average, which is 807,000 acres. The crops are a foot high, and generally in excellent condition. So far we have every promise of a good average crop. The out-turn of jowari (or great millet), the staple food of the people, is estimated as quite up to, if not above, the average." "Acreage under linseed below that of last year, which was 621,000 acres, owing to excessive rainfall at time of sowing. The crop has suffered generally from untimely rainfall and blight. On the whole, not more than a ten or twelve anna crop is expected."

NORTH-WEST PROVINCES, OUDH, AND PUNJAB.

THE EARL OF FIFE, Mr. Ogle, and party visited the Ali Musjid fort in the Khyber on the 31st ult. Lord Fife and Mr. Ogle were to go to Kohat on the 2nd inst.

AT the Allahabad Tennis Tournament on December 30 the single championship was won by Mr. R. H. Brereton (Cawnpore), who defeated Captain Anson, the holder of the cup, after a most exciting encounter.

THE official members of the new Legislative Council for the North-West Provinces are the Hon. J. W. Quinton, Mr. J. Woodburn, Mr. A. McConaghey, and Mr. G. E. Knox. The non-officials are Mr. T. Conlan, barrister-at-law; Raja Pertab Narayan Singh; Syed Ahmed Khan Bahadur; Pandit Ajudhia Nath; and Rai Durga Pershad, Bahadur, of Gorakhpur. The members of the Council will, as in the case of the members of the other Legislative Councils, be dignified with the title of honourable during their period of office. The first meeting of the Council has been held.

IT is curiously instructive, observes the Lahore paper, to note the fact that the titular Maharaja Dhuleep Singh's abortive attempt to agitate India has been followed by the repetition of the "Sikhy" prophecy of Guru Govind Singh, which foretells the restoration of the "Khalsa" power in the Punjab. Itinerating religious mendicants have been busy in impressively repeating it among the Sikh community, generally with the exhortation that the time for the fulfilment of the latter portion of it is drawing very near; and that Dhuleep Singh is in Russia now, and that the Czar has placed at his disposal an army of two lakhs of men with which he will invade India through Afghanistan, and recover his throne and country in the Punjab.

NATIVE PRESS.

THE TONE OF THE NATIVE PRESS.

THE Muslim Herald says:—It adds immensely to our sincere regret to notice the intemperateness of tone that characterises the writings of a number of our Native contemporaries in dealing with Government. The worst feature of the thing is its tendency towards increase. In saying so, we do not mean that because our policy in that direction is different from theirs we take the opportunity of taunting them—not the least. We very earnestly feel for our brethren of the Press. We may be younger, and of less importance than several of them, but it does not follow that our friendly remonstrance in their interest should be despised. "A word of advice even on a dilapidated wall," said a sage, "should be read with more than a passing notice." We have urged upon our brethren times out of number that their advocacy of the rights of the Indian peoples in the language now employed by them is more an exhibition of hostility than an appeal for good. It is true that there are certain wrongs in the British rule which require to be righted. Is it not true, also, that under that rule we are enjoying advantages considerably numerous compared with those wrongs? It is true that in consideration of these advantages we should not give up our claims for the remedy of the wrongs. Is it not, then, true that to obtain that is a work of time? If we recall to our mind the condition in which our ancestors were fifty years back we must confess how far we have made progress in civilisation, and this we owe to the mission of the British nation amongst us. Our desire to have our wants supplied, our aspiration to have a share in the administration of our country are, no doubt, natural and creditable, too, as a nation; but, compared with the time fifty years back, have we not improved in these? Is this not, then, a clear proof that we will have more of it in the course of time? But worry and hurry would only affect our interests and could never bring home for us our wants. Because a certain percentage of our countrymen are educated, it does not justify our coming forward slipshod to demand all and everything at once. Gradual attainment of anything is the proof of its durability—the growth of every durable object in the world is gradual.

THE following order has been issued by Major-General Murray C.B., commanding the Lahore Division:—"It is with the deepest regret that the Major-General Commanding has had authentic intelligence of the death of Lieutenant-Colonel Seymour Barrow, 10th Bengal Lancers, at sea, on the 12th instant, by which his regiment has not only sustained an irreparable loss, but the Indian army loses one of its best and most distinguished cavalry officers; while it falls to the lot of few to be mourned by such a large circle of friends."

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

THE strength of the garrison of the fort at Jhansi has been fixed at a company of British infantry, a company of Native infantry, and twenty men of the Royal Artillery.

THE Pioneer says:—"It is rumoured that a station noted for its high scores in simultaneous match rifle shooting, and long suspected of being too good, is likely to be at last brought to book. The subject is, we hear, under investigation."

ON the transfer of Brigadier-General H. M. G. Purvis, Commanding Mooltan Brigade, to the Command of the Presidency District, Colonel Galbraith, who is expected in India about the 10th instant, takes command of the Mooltan Brigade.

THE Government of India have authorised the issue of ten Martini-Henry rifles to each British cavalry regiment in India for match shooting purposes, and 200 rounds of Martini Henry ammunition per rifle, on payment, to each Native regiment for the ten Martini-Henry rifles in possession for match shooting.

AMONG impending changes in military commands, the Pioneer understands that Brigadier-General F. B. Norman from Sealkote goes to Assam, when General John Gordon vacates the Eastern Frontier District, which must be soon. Brigadier-General Galbraith, who is coming out from England to take up the vacant brigade, is to be posted to Mooltan.

THE experiment tried with the Indian Marine steamer Tenas-serim, which was cruising about in the Bay of Bengal for some three months with sick soldiers from Burma is, the Pioneer says, not likely to be repeated. It is said that it would have cost the Government less to have sent the men home to England and brought them out again. Nor were the results satisfactory; there were two deaths on board, and two other men died shortly after they were put on shore.

THE Pioneer, in alluding to the recent practice with the 38-ton gun in Bombay, says:—"Perhaps the outcome of the invitation of the British Government to the different Colonies to discuss measures of mutual defence may lead to the armament of our many Eastern ports of natural strength—and Bombay among the rest—with the very best heavy artillery that science has devised and money can procure. Bombay is a city which it would be well worth while, and by no means difficult, to render impregnable."

THE attention of officers commanding British and Native regiments is invited in General Orders to G.O.C.C., dated 8th March, 1883, page 84, regarding the training of non-commissioned officers and men in the manufacture of blank ammunition on the Morris' system. In order that there may always be men in a regiment conversant with the method, and to avoid the necessity and expense of sending men to arsenals for instruction, those who have been once trained should be detailed to instruct others without delay.

THE British soldiers behaved nobly at the fire at the Madras Fair. A correspondent writes to a Madras paper:—"All persons who witnessed the catastrophe will, I am sure, join in the hope that some public recognition of the most valuable and willing service rendered by the British soldiers present at the scene of the accident will be made, if it is only a few commentary remarks in Orders. If it had not been for them, some who were taken to the hospital would have died where they fell. They worked as earnestly and willingly as they always do when duty calls. Some made stretchers, others with their jackets off separated the bodies, others helped to take the wounded to the hospital. They had only to be asked to do a thing and it was done, setting a brilliant example of work in the cause of humanity to all the Natives of Madras who saw them."

A POONA paper states that Lieutenant-General his Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught, Commander-in-Chief of the Bombay Army, will shortly proceed on a tour of inspection, when the following places will be visited:—Ahmednuggur, Mhow, Neemuch, Nusseerabad, Ajmere, Mount Abo, Deesa, Rajkote, and Baroda. His Royal Highness leaves Poona on the 12th inst. by the 8 A.M. train, accompanied by the Adjutant-General, the Quartermaster-General, the Assistant-Adjutant-General, Royal Artillery, the Military Secretary, the Equerry-in-Waiting, the Surgeon-Major, and the Aide-de Camp in waiting. The tour will only be a short one, lasting about three weeks, as his Royal Highness purposes reaching Bombay by the 3rd February.

THE following appointments have been made to the Upper Burma Field Force:—Lieut. W. M. Tracey, Royal West Surrey Regiment, to be commandant of Mounted Infantry at Nyingyan, vice Lieut. McIntyre, proceeding to Yemethen; Lieut. F. J. Pink, Royal West Surrey Regiment, to be intelligence officer with the brigade; and Lieut. H. D. E. Parsons, of the same corps, to be post transport officer at Nyingyan, vice Lieut. Hinde, 3rd Madras Light Infantry, leaving the command. Captain Dunlop, R.A., on special service, has been attached to the 5-1 Southern Division, for duty with the Gardner machine guns. Major W. Clark, 1st Battalion Oxfordshire Light Infantry, on special service, has been ordered to join the 3rd Brigade for employment under Brigadier-General Lockhart; Captain F. M. Rundall, 9th Bengal Infantry, at present commanding the Post at Yendaw, has been appointed road commandant 3rd Brigade District; Lieutenant H. U. Warde, 43rd Goorkha Light Infantry, has been appointed post transport officer at Kyan Nhyat.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

THE CHIEF PERIODS OF EUROPEAN HISTORY.*

These masterly essays are not intended so much to summarise events as to draw attention to "the main outlines of European History as grouped round its central point, the Roman power." With the pen of a skilled writer Mr. Freeman touches, of course cursorily, upon "Europe before the growth of Rome. Europe with Rome in one shape or another as her centre. Europe since Rome has practically ceased to be." It is needless to say that the work merits, and is sure to receive, careful perusal; so scarce a sentence in it but what embodies a volume of reflection, thought, and historical acumen; to criticise is difficult, perhaps, indeed, hopeless. But is it not peculiar that a mind so large, an intellect so profound, as Nature has bestowed upon the Regius Professor of Modern History at Oxford—a mind so sensible, withal, to the danger of "narrow" views, is unable to realise that, deeply as is to be deplored the irruption of the Ottoman race into Europe, so far as concerns the world of letters, possibly, even as regards the interests of civilisation—the possession of the "unspeakable Turk" of Constantinople is desirable from a political point of view? It is far from our intention to enter upon a discussion on this point, which is, of course, diplomatic rather than literary. We will content ourselves with the question, If the "bag and baggage" policy were carried out, to whom is to be assigned the coveted city which forms the pivot on which revolves the intricate problem known to fame as the Eastern question?

But a truce to politics, except in so far as they are interwoven in the remarkable chapter entitled "The World Rounders," wherein it is pointed out—and it is a strange and astonishing circumstance—that Europe, in this the nineteenth century of grace, has reverted to the times of disunion which characterised the days when Rome had not dawned upon mankind to link them in one mighty empire, one nation, one dominion, though many peoples, many races, many tribes. The want of a strong ruling hand left each petty kingdom then to work its own wicked will; the need of one Central Power, to which all countries bow the knee in at least nominal subjection, renders at the present time the Councils of Europe the battle ground of strife, discord, and war. This is the lesson of Mr. Freeman's lecture. It is instructive, but it is sad. The world would be wiser, aye, happier, were this page of its annals more closely studied. Universal liberty means too frequently universal licence; it is true of individuals, it is true of nations. The Millennium seems as far off as in the darkest ages of ignorance and folly. May not "Federation" do for civilisation what philosophy, learning, science, and art are each and all powerless to effect?

INCIDENTS IN THE LIFE OF MADAME BLAVATSKY.†

Mr. Sinnett, in his Memoir of Madame Blavatsky, makes large demand upon public credulity in asking the world to believe in the subject of his biography.

Who and what this celebrated lady is must be left to the reader to discern; suffice to say that she is, or professes to be, a "clairvoyant," endowed with a faculty of communication with the unseen world. If her "mission" be accepted, what a monstrous "draft" on common sense must be honoured! Here are a few items taken more or less at hazard: A stuffed flamingo had been ages ago a "real man" changed into a bird as a punishment for the commission of fearful crimes (p. 40); bees can be addressed in a language which they understand (p. 42); chairs can be removed from their places, thrown with violence all about the room, after which they pick themselves up again and go back uninjured to their accustomed places (p. 47); the spirits of the dead can be brought down from the skies and made to tell of their sufferings, &c. (p. 113); "one's son may become gradually his own grandfather and his aunt to boot" (p. 176), of course, esoterically; presents of jewellery come to hand ready made (p. 196); a picture equal to a Titian or a Raphael is produced in a few moments (p. 203); a person can die at pleasure (p. 252), can write on all subjects without knowing anything about the matter touched upon (p. 206), can be cured without medicine or surgical treatment (p. 255).

These are but a few of the many marvels which have to be credited. It must in all fairness be admitted that the miracles which M. Blavatsky claims to have worked are attested by numerous persons whose integrity is not to be impeached, and whose testimony carries well nigh irresistible weight; but does Mr. Sinnett act quite reasonably in the attitude which he assumes in the matter in writing down as "Laughing Jackasses" all who venture to use the senses with which Providence has blessed them? As well might a visitor to Messrs. Story and Maskelyne be written down a fool because, unable to detect the mysteries and marvels which astonish, perplex and delude him, he still refuses to believe what he sees. So, forsooth, if we refuse to credit, exempli gratia, that there is no such thing as "the law of gravitation, as it is generally understood," are we to be condemned to the limbo of idiots, senseless bigots, and the like?

If Mr. Sinnett holds to the view that should he jump out of window, or, to quote a case given in the volume before us, tumble off a horse, and not in either instance fall to the ground, good—so be it; but "Materialists" who think otherwise are surely not to be blamed for a belief upon which personal safety largely rests. This is bigotry far more bigoted than that which he himself so severely condemns.

We have refrained from satire and spite; albeit the attraction was well-nigh irresistible. The book must be judged by the standard of each individual reader; and being interesting to an unusual degree there should be many anxious to "dip into the unknown." We are content to be included amongst the oi polloi of mankind, and swell the total of senseless, scarce-witted, long-eared "laughing jackasses."

THE JOURNAL OF THE ROYAL ASIATIC SOCIETY.*

It is not easy to realise that even "esoteric Buddhism" could have produced in the mind of De la Motte Fouqué an unconscious adumbration of a hitherto unpublished, Japanese romance; and our wonder is excited when we find how closely, in some detail, the "Old Bamboo-Hewer," the first paper in the present issue of the "Royal Asiatic Society Journal," runs "on all fours"—with Undine, the one tale which, said Coleridge, "had presented to his imagination, what Scott had never done, an absolutely new idea."

The Lady Kaguya belongs, like Undine, to an unearthly and supernatural race, which she has to rejoin, after a certain sojourn on earth. She, however, belongs (not, like Undine, to the water-folk, but) to the moonfolk, who in due course fetch her from her earthly abode: during her stay in which, as the supposed daughter of a bamboo-hewer, she has refused many suitors, by setting them, as the price of her hand, to perform tasks as hopeless as that (weaving ropes out of sea sand) which "the mighty wizard, Michael Scott," set the Devil. The story, which is accompanied by nicely-coloured illustrations of Japanese scenes, well deserves perusal.

Dr. Duka, whose interesting life of his compatriot Csoma de Körös, excited so much attention some months back, has prepared an Essay on the Brahui Grammar, founded on a previous attempt at an elucidation of this somewhat recondite subject by Dr. Ernest Trumpp, so well known as the translator of the "Adi-Granth." As Dr. Duka shows, the Brahui language deserves far more attention than it has hitherto received. Though it is spoken in one province only, the Khárat of Khelat, and is, even there, not adopted (p. 64) as the Court language, on the ground of its not being "sufficiently refined," it presents not a few noteworthy peculiarities, which are well brought into prominence by the writer.

British policy—or want of policy—has allowed the Caucasus to fall so thoroughly into Russian hands, that, under the system prevalent in the Tsar's dominions, of extinguishing all languages but Russian, there will soon be no Caucasian languages to write about. Our Vice-Consul at Batum, Mr. Peacock, has done his best to give, in five different languages of the West Caucasus, the equivalents of the words and sentences contained in the Asiatic Society's "Standard Form;" and, as Dr. Cust remarks, these vocabularies possess high interest.

THE YOUNG TEA-PLANTER'S COMPANION.†

This little work contains in small compass everything which it is necessary that the young planter, or manager, of a Tea-garden should know. It is primarily addressed to the latter, who, at first in a budding state, usually blossoms into the former; and it contains, for his benefit, directions for the monthly operations of tea-cultivation as precise and as minute as can be found in any of the best treatises on European gardening. Excellent plans and sections of the needful buildings, including stables, are given: we specify the latter, because it gives us occasion to remark, how pleased we are to see, that Mr. Deas inculcates on every planter the care of that noble animal, the horse, which he himself evidently cherishes with a full measure of affection.

Hints for the planter's own life follow; and, on the principle that all work and no play will not conduce to the brightness of his intellect, he is bidden to have a tennis ground, a plan whereof (the points being marked by inverted beer-bottles, which the planter—having duly disposed of their contents—is to insert in the ground) is given for his benefit. Altogether, the book is not only calculated to be most useful to the class for whom it is intended, but it is written in a right cheery spirit, and, may well induce many a man—we would not answer for ourselves, were we younger—to "go in for Tea."

ALPINE WINTER IN ITS MEDICAL ASPECTS.*

In a previous number (Allen's Indian Mail, 1886, p. 481) we noticed Dr. Wise's little book on the Maloja, and we are not surprised to find him returning to the charge, as regards the great, and, until lately, unsuspected, importance, in the treatment of pulmonary affections, of the singularly pure air which the Alps offer, even in winter. Nature is full of analogies, and the anti-septic influence of a peculiarly dry air on any zymotic disease might have been suspected. The illustration, given in the Author's note to p. 43, that of "the drying and preserving of meat hung in the air" in the climates of which this work treats, is, however novel to some, strictly germane, from the medical point of view, to the action of the same atmosphere on certain phthisical symptoms.

It is interesting to note that the first to call attention to this value of dry, frosty, air, as a remedial agent, was (p. 10) an English practitioner, Dr. George Bodington, who, nearly half a century ago, showed the way to many who have since "entered into his labours," and from whose little work Dr. Wise quotes a very pertinent passage.

Even the autumnal falling of the snow, which might be supposed, in Switzerland, to presage a degree of cold unfavourable to a pulmonary patient, does, we are assured (p. 50), but intensify the virtues of mountain air. The work is the more valuable as containing those important hints about clothing and diet which fall so especially within the province of the medical specialist, and is illustrated by views of the various places named, while an itinerary of the chief points to which excursions may, in summer or in winter, be directed, enhances its utility.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, JANUARY 24, 1887.

THE JUBILEE IN INDIA.

THE news that preparations are being made throughout the length and breadth of India to celebrate Her Majesty's Jubilee Year will naturally be considered as most satisfactory and a thing to rejoice at. The days fixed for the celebration are February 16th and 17th, and there is no doubt of its being carried out in all the Presidency capitals and towns with all befitting pomp and grandeur, and in smaller places with proportionate earnestness and display. In Bombay alone the Municipality has granted one lakh of rupees for the purpose, and Calcutta and Madras are not likely to allow their respective Municipalities to be outdone in munificence by the Western Presidency. In addition to these grants private contributions will, of course, flow in in liberal streams. In the Native States high holiday will also be kept, and the event will be celebrated with all the surroundings of the "barbaric pearl and gold" which still hold their fascinations upon the simple Native mind. From the palace of the prince to the peasant's hut there will be a show of loyalty to the Queen of England, if even the poor man's home can display it by no better symbol than the light of a single chirag. The story of this spontaneous exhibition of loyalty and affection from 250 millions of conquered races towards the Queen of their conquerors will of course be telegraphed to Christian Europe, where, if the alarmists of to-day are to be believed, the Christians of the Continent will be cutting, or about to begin cutting, one another's throats. The contrast between the conduct of the unenlightened Infidels and that of the representatives of Civilisation and Christianity will be a striking one for the purposes of the philosopher or the historian, although it may be doubted whether anybody else will care to draw a moral from it. If so the moral will hardly be on the side of the preachers of the beautiful faith which for nearly two thousand years is supposed to have been bringing its votaries into closer and kindlier fellowship.

But moralising is unprofitable pastime, and if Hindu, Mahomedan, Sikh, and Parsi choose to remain obstinately peaceful in India when Christians in Europe are murdering each other, let it be the pleasure of Exeter Hall to convert them to a holier state of mind.

But there is another reflection which the news from India to-day gives rise to. We have written the word spontaneous as characterising the exhibition of loyalty to the Queen and to the rule of England in the East. We hope that the word has not been misplaced, and that in inviting all classes of the Natives to join in the Jubilee demonstration officious official interference will take no part. There is—as known to all who have experience of the Oriental character—a difficulty in the matter not easily understood by those who have no such experience. Money can always be got, and lip-loyalty, too, for any demonstration which the Native thinks is ordered by the Government—for the hockum of the Saheb must be obeyed—otherwise the consequences might be unpleasant. In such cases gratitude for the benefits of English rule is always forthcoming, for in the East the cynic's aphorism that gratitude is a lively sense of favours to come is thoroughly appreciated and acted upon. We hope for better things to-day, and it is with pleasure that we read in the Native papers which have come to hand addresses to their countrymen which have all the appearance of having been penned in earnestness and in good faith. If a permanent memorial of the occasion is to take the shape which Lady Dufferin suggests, nothing could be more promising than what one Native editor writes:—

The Indu-Prakash says:—"The appeal issued by the Countess of Dufferin on the New Year's Day, inviting subscriptions in aid of the Female Medical Relief Fund, is worthy of the heartiest response from all classes. There is a peculiar fitness and opportuneness in the issue of the appeal on the first day of Her Majesty the Queen-Empress's Jubilee year. The association of the appeal with the Jubilee, and the unpretentious nature of the scheme, are sure to make the appeal a success. There is no limit fixed to the amount of subscriptions. Anything will be welcome. The poorest of the poor can thus be reached and the movement made truly national."

A spontaneous exhibition of Indian loyalty will be the proudest triumph of British administration, and an answer to all who have carped or still carp at the wisdom and beneficence of that rule.

CRICKET in Bengal is very often only a farce. On Tuesday last, for instance, a match was played in Calcutta between the Presidency College and Dacca College. In the team of the latter were two Europeans, who went in last on their side, made no attempt to play the bowling, but "slogged" it all over the place; and, when the Calcutta cricketers went in, bowled them all out for about fifty. In consequence of this, the Calcutta Team objected to any European element in the Bengali game of cricket; so they began their match again, with the two Europeans as spectators.

THE MADRAS CATASTROPHE.

MADRAS, JAN. 2.

The fair in the People's Park is now an institution of several years' standing. It is held annually at the end of December, in order that the Natives may have innocent amusements during the Christmas holidays. It is very popular, and is the means of attracting many thousands of people from all parts of the Presidency, special facilities for travelling being afforded by the local railway companies. This year it was decided to extend the fair over six days in honour of Her Majesty the Queen Empress's Jubilee. The number attending the fair has been greater than usual, and the attractions in the shape of shows of various kinds, and stalls for the sale of fancy articles, were more numerous than before. The fair commenced on Monday, and has been favoured by good weather. It is held in the People's Park, a large park in the middle of Madras city, containing a zoological collection, baths, a bandstand, gymnasium, &c. In the centre of the Park the bandstand enclosure is situated, there being a wide circular drive round the stand, at about thirty yards' distance from it. This circular drive was bounded by a collection of booths for the sale of fancy goods, refreshments, Waterbury watches, and also by one or two nautch and dancing saloons. All these booths were built of wood and roofed with cadjan leaves, and the contents of many of them were mainly of inflammable materials. Close to the bandstand a pendal with boarded floor had been erected for dancing, and admittance to the enclosure was obtained by paying a small fee. Outside the enclosure were streets of stalls and shows of various descriptions.

THE SCENE OF THE FIRE.

At about six o'clock on Friday night the bandstand enclosure was crowded with thousands of people, including the Commander-in-Chief of Madras, Lady Arbuthnot, the First Prince of Travancore, and others who had just left the sports arena to see the contents of the enclosure. At about five minutes after six a fire suddenly broke out in a sweetmeat stall on the south side of the enclosure and was rapidly spreading when a fire broke out exactly opposite on the north side. There were four entrance gates, and there was at once a tremendous rush of shrieking panic-stricken Natives to these gates. Europeans as a rule had the good sense to run to the middle of the enclosure, where they were fairly safe for some time. Presently, however, the dancing pendal caught fire, and this drove away all persons who were taking refuge near it. However, by constant shifting it was possible to evade the great heat of the fire as it rapidly ran its course round the circle. Attempts were made to isolate the fire, but time did not allow of these attempts being successful, excepting in one part, where about one-quarter of the circle of booths was saved. At two of the gates there was a block, the reason for which is given in various forms, some persons stating that there was an attempt on the part of some people to enter the enclosure, thus meeting the crowd rushing out. At any rate, there was an immense heap of people at the east and west gates, the loose bamboos lying about after part of the gateway had been knocked down, causing many women and children to fall down. The Europeans and East-Indians present, with a few Natives pluckier than the rest, set to work to drag the persons forming the heads from the fire, but before rescuing a third of them the rest were all suffocated or roasted. The sight was sufficient to unnerve the strongest man as he stood back from the fire watching a mass of human beings being burnt to death or suffocated, because the people were unable to get near them for some time owing to the heat of the fire. The work of destruction was soon over, and in half-an-hour or three-quarters some fire-engines appeared inside the enclosure and commenced to discharge water (which was in very short supply) upon the heaps of human beings. The soldiers present, including men of the wing of the Bedfordshire Regiment now garrisoning at Fort St. George, and some artillerymen from St. Thomas' Mount, worked well at anything, pulling down burning posts, dragging out bodies (dead and alive), and working the fire-engines. Some East-Indian artificers belonging to the Gun Carriage Factory deserve credit for their prompt endeavours to save life and property. The police, under Colonel Weldon, Commissioner of Police, and Mr. S. D. Simpson, Deputy Commissioner were present in strong force, and kept good order after the fire had subsided, and did all they could. The two officers mentioned were extremely active, and their devotion to duty deserves public recognition. Most of the people who were inside the enclosure when the fire broke out escaped, but about 450 were either suffocated, burnt to death, or injured. Stretchers were soon brought from the General Hospital (a quarter of a mile distant) or made up on the spot, and the injured persons were taken to the hospital as fast as they could be rescued from the heap of bodies, the corpses being left on the ground till next morning. The stench was abominable, while the smoke was blinding for an hour or more. Immense crowds of Natives, anxious to find missing friends or relatives, kept the police and others employed in maintaining order. Some bodies were looted of jewellery.

THE ORIGIN OF THE FIRE.

Various reports are current as to the cause of the fire, but the general impression is that it was a case of incendiarism. Some sepoys of a regiment stationed in Madras were troublesome to the police on Monday, and were arrested, the consequence being they were afterwards refused admittance into the fair. This they resented, and some of them were heard to threaten to burn the fair buildings. It was reported that the electric light apparatus which has not been used in consequence of being out of order was the cause of the fire, but the apparatus, although about to be tried, had not been set to work.

TREATMENT OF THE INJURED.

Dr. Keess, Principal of the Madras Medical College, and who is at the head of the General Hospital here, happened to be in the Park when the fire broke out, and proceeded to the hospital at once to arrange for the reception of the injured persons. The first cases were admitted at 6.30 p.m., and the matron and all nurses proceeded to dress the sufferers. Hon. Surgeon Lawrence was among the first to volunteer help. Soon afterwards Surgeon Pope and Dr. Naylor joined the workers, and laboured hard until the last cases were brought in, about 10.30 p.m. Surgeon-Major Thompson, C.I.E., arrived later on, and with his subordinate staff afforded valuable help. Brigade-Surgeon Sibthorpe (who was with Sir H. Macpherson when he died) followed, and carefully attended the patients after their admission to the wards. The resources of the hospital were taxed to the utmost. Cotton mattresses were ripped up, and all the cotton they contained was utilised. A large number of sheets and clothing of every description was torn up for dressing. Carron oil was made by the gallon out of every available oil in store. Nourishment, stimulants, and opiates were freely administered. All the old patients, who were capable of being moved out of their beds, were accommodated in the verandahs, the beds being occupied by the sufferers being brought in. At midnight a census was taken, with the following result:—In wards—83 Natives and 2 Europeans. In dead-house—23 Natives.

A very serious interruption to work was threatened several times by the excited crowd forcing its way into the hospital. Most of the admissions were cases of aggravated burns attended with shocks. The cries of the sufferers were harrowing in the extreme, notwithstanding the free use of opiates. A census was taken at seven o'clock this (Saturday) morning, with the following results:—Sick and under treatment—60 Natives and 2 Europeans. Dead—42 Natives. Removed by friends—10 Natives.

THE SCENE ON SATURDAY MORNING.

Daylight on New Year's morning revealed the scene in all its ghastly reality. The half-burned bodies lying in heaps where they fell and where they had been removed during the night to better assist identification, presented a sickening spectacle. Thousands of Natives crowded into the Park in search of missing relatives, and the efforts of a strong body of police were powerless to keep back the almost frantic crowds who greatly impeded the work of removing the bodies. Many a sad scene was witnessed as some lost relation was discovered among the dead. Women tore their hair and loudly bemoaned the loss of husband or brother, and fathers broken down with grief carried away the almost unrecognisable remains of their children. Strong men and children, young men and maidens, being hidden in masses where their awful deaths overtook them. Many of the victims met their deaths by suffocation, and were not burned at all, but the majority had been horribly mutilated by the fire. The work of removing the bodies commenced at daylight, each body as it was identified being carried away by a crowd of sorrowing friends. As, however, a large number of the victims are residents in the Mofussil, with no relatives near, they lay for some time unclaimed, and some were so terribly mutilated as to be beyond identification. The lamentations of the bereaved over the losses of their lost ones, the anxious excitement of those whose friends were missing and whose bodies could not be discovered, who rushed eagerly from group to group, made a spectacle frightful in the extreme, and one which no one would like to look upon again. The full extent of the calamity will thus be realised, and it will have brought home to the minds of all that the catastrophe is one of terrible magnitude.

THE MAHOMEDANS AND THE NATIONAL CONGRESS.

The following letter has been addressed by Nawab Abdul Lutef, Khan Bhadoor, C.I.E., Secretary to the Mahomedan Literary Society of Calcutta, to the Hon. Baboo Peary Mohun Mookerjee and Mr. I. Ghosal, members of the reception committee:—

The committee of management of the Mahomedan Literary Society of Calcutta desire me to acknowledge with thanks the receipt of the invitation which you have conveyed to them, on behalf of the reception committee to take part in the Congress of Delegates from certain towns in India, which it is proposed to hold shortly in the rooms of the British Indian Association. The members of the Committee of the Mahomedan Literary Society are fully convinced that the aim of the forthcoming Congress is to promote measures which it is considered will tend to the amelioration of the condition of the peoples of India; and they would greatly regret to do anything which would have even the appearance of withholding from such a worthy object any support which their co-operation might give. At the same time, the committee are not unmindful of the harm which might arise from any premature and hasty consideration of difficult and momentous questions such as it is understood will come within the purview of the deliberations of the Congress; nor do they consider that the moment is opportune for forcing any particular views upon the notice of the Government. The committee further venture to remark that since the establishment of British rule in India, the condition of the Natives has been systematically regarded by the Government, especially during the past decade, and there are indications in every direction of a determination on their part to further promote the interests of all classes, so far as may be consistent with the requirements of the various nationalities which constitute British India, and to institute all inquiries which may be necessary for that purpose. The members of the Mahomedan Literary Society regret, therefore, that they do not feel justified, in the interests of the Natives of India and of Mahomedans in particular, in participating in any demonstration of the kind contemplated by the reception committee. They are the more confirmed in this opinion, seeing that, as in the past, all classes have the constitutional right of addressing Government and receiving careful attention from them. This has been the case with such representations as the Mahomedan Literary Society have, from time to time during nearly a quarter of a century, felt it expedient to address the Government in the interests of their co-religionists. With this knowledge guiding them in their relations with the Government, the committee would rather adhere to this legitimate and hitherto successful mode of procedure in any future matter in which they may consider it necessary to take action, whether on their own initiation, or conjointly with other associations. The Mahomedan Literary Society, representing the orthodox Mahomedan community in India, which forms the bulk of the Mahomedan population, are not disposed to accept hasty proposals, however well meant, which have a tendency to revolutionise time-honoured institutions, and to bring about changes which are novel, and which they consider unsuited to the exigencies of the India of to-day, and the various and conflicting interests in it. I am, therefore, to repeat the regret of the members of the committee of the Mahomedan Literary Society that they are not able to comply with the request of the reception committee. They would prefer not to hamper Government in any way at a time when they are aware that the Government are devoting themselves to a careful consideration of how best to meet the natural aspirations of the Natives of India.

If we may credit the statement of the Pioneer, oil is imported into India on a gigantic scale. In its issue, our contemporary in the course of a leading article on Dr. Watts's recent lecture on the trade of India makes the following extraordinary statement:—"Last year she (India) imported nearly fifty millions sterling worth of vegetable oil from the United Kingdom and thirty millions worth from Ceylon." In the same article the Pioneer states that the total imports last year amounted only to sixty-seven millions sterling, so that, supposing these figures to be correct, three-fourths of the imports of India consist of vegetable oil from the United Kingdom. It is scarcely necessary to say that the figures are not correct, oil only representing a relatively small proportion of the total imports.

A CURIOUS defamation case is being tried in Calcutta, in which a native shipowner sues one of his captains, named Henry Brown, for defamation, in accusing him of an attempt to scuttle the ship and secure the insurance money. The charge, it appears, was published Indian Daily News on the 20th October last, in an article written by the sub-editor of the paper from information derived from Captain Brown. The case is still sub judice, but will have an instructive bearing on the responsibility of newspapers for libellous matters. Mr. Edmund Yates, it will be remembered, went to prison at home for a libel in the World, which he not only did not write himself, but which was not even written in the office of the World. In this case, on the other hand, the responsibility for an article written by the sub-editor of the Indian Daily News and published in that newspaper is, and with some reason, laid at the door of the outsider who merely supplied the material for the article.

A VERY clever and useful invention, and one peculiarly suitable for India, Ceylon, and other tropical countries, is the "Hall" Type Writer. It has been termed the "ideal typograph," in that it is simple, compact, easy to learn and to use, and entirely satisfactory in its results. Mr. W. H. Glenny, of the Madras Civil Service, says :—"It is a beautiful little instrument, most ingenious in construction, and of such thoroughly honest workmanship that the dry heat of the Deccan hot weather, and the dampness of the rainy seasons, have not had the slightest effect either on the instrument itself or on its workings, and I have carried mine about without special precautions, and have used it in tents in all weathers. The instrument is always pleasant and clean in working. By its use one escapes the nuisance of writing with bad pens, in thickened ink, or greasy paper; pens, ink, and paper are all of them very liable to deterioration in a climate like this, while blotting paper often refuses to act. I would not be without my Type Writer for three times its cost." Similar confirmatory testimonials from Haizaribagh, the Indian Public Works Department, and elsewhere, have been sent to the sole agents, Messrs. Witherby and Co., 325a, High Holborn, W.C., and 74, Cornhill, E.C.

VERY curious deeds sometimes come under the cognisance of the Indian Registration Departments. In the Rangpore districts, a recent report tells us, a deed was stamped and registered, by which a man bound himself to serve his wife's uncle—her father was dead—and not to leave the uncle's house, or take the girl away. "I am unable to marry," says the deed, "from my own resources; and I hereby bind myself to live in your house with my wife, and to act according to your orders. I further bind myself that I have no right to make any complaint against you in any court of law regarding the detention of my wife in your house, and if I do so, it will be null and void." The uncle had required a dôt of Rs. 80 for his niece Kinibi Bibi, which her admirer was unable to pay. He seems to be wiser in his generation than Jacob; for he marries first, and goes into service afterwards, and there will be no chance of substituting some older though tender-eyed Leah for the well-favoured Kinibi Bibi. In Furreedpore, the same report tells us, a bridegroom executes a deed, in which he stipulates never to scold his wife; who, if the promise is broken, may have a divorce. This somewhat exacting young lady is to go to her father's house as often as she likes; and, in case her husband should object, she is empowered, in the deed, to bring an action against him for unlawful confinement. In Dacca, a deed has been registered empowering the wife to get a divorce, should her husband ever disagree with her.

AND

NAVAL AND MILITARY GAZETTE.

ESTABLISHED 1833.

EVERY SATURDAY. PRICE SIXPENCE.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" has acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent course of its staff of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A series of Illustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" freely opens its correspondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for interchange of opinion is afforded, such as is offered by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supplements."

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" circulates largely throughout India and the Colonies. It is supplied direct to the Army and Marine bureaux of the French, Russian, and other Government, and it is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Services, especially of the German, French, and American Armies, who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.

THE CALCUTTA REVIEW.

(The only Quarterly Review in India.)

ESTABLISHED 1844.

OPINIONS.

The Calcutta Review for October reached us a day or two ago, and a glance at its contents shows that the number more than sustains the reputation which this old and favourite publication is again achieving. The Review is rapidly regaining the position which it . . . there is no fear of the Indian Review, or the Asiatic Quarterly rivalling it in public favour.—Statesman, October, 1886.

. . . The best service which I ever rendered in India, or, indeed, for India, was the establishment, single-handed, of the Calcutta Review, which has done far more for Indian literature than anything I have written under my own name.—J. W. KAYE, Athenæum Club, June 23, 1872.

The Calcutta Review has given us valuable articles on the army. Some from the pen of Sir Henry Lawrence, who wrote with the spirit of prophecy, of the coming storm of which he was one of the noblest victims.—Address of the C-in-C. at the U.S. Inst. of India.

. . . The Calcutta Review has not only throughout its career reflected the highest honour on its public-spirited promoters and its well-known distinguished contributors, but has done much to help forward the reconstruction of our system of governing India.—Westminster Review.

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

A MAGAZINE THAT GIVES EXPRESSION
TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF THE PEOPLE OF
INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing MONTHLY (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE

COUGHS, COLD,
ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff) DISCOVERED A REMEDY to denote which he coined the word CHLORODYNE. Dr. Browne is the SOLE INVENTOR, and as the composition of Chlorodyne cannot possibly be discovered by Analysis (organic substances defying elimination), and since the formula has never been published, it is evident that a compound is identical with Dr. Browne's Chlorodyne must be false. This is a necessary, as many persons have purchased by false representations.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—Vice Chancellor Sir W. PAGE WOOD stated publicly in Court that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was UNDOUBTEDLY THE INVENTOR OF CHLORODYNE, that the whole story of the defendant Freeman was deliberately untrue, and he asserted to say it had been sworn to. See The Times, July 18th, 1884.

DIARRHOEA, DYSENTERY. GENERAL BOARD OF HEALTH, London, REPORT that it ACTS as a CHARM, one dose generally sufficient. Dr. GIBSON, Army Medical Staff, Calcutta, states: "2 DOSES COMPLETELY CURED ME OF DIARRHOEA." From Symes & Co., Pharmaceutical Chemists, Simla. Jan. 5, 1880.

DEAR SIR,—We congratulate you upon the widespread reputation this justly-esteemed medicine has earned for itself all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars, and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances ad infinitum of the extraordinary efficacy of Dr. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE in Diarrhoea and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia, the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Cholera Diarrhoea, and even in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power. J. T. DAVENPORT, 36, Russell St., W.C.

We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's, from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist to prescribe and patient alike. We are, Sir, faithfully yours, SYMES & CO., Members of the Pharm. Society of Great Britain, His Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is the TRUE PALLIATIVE in NEURALGIA, GOUT, CANCER, TOOTHACHE, RHEUMATISM.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a liquid medicine which assuages PAIN of EVERY KIND, affords a calm, refreshing sleep WITHOUT HEADACHE, and VIGORATES the nervous system when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts short all attacks of EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC, PALPITATION, Hysteria.

General Intelligence.

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 14th January; from Allahabad and Madras to the 12th January; and from Calcutta to the 11th January.

It has been officially announced that the Queen's Jubilee will be celebrated in India on February 16th.

At a public meeting held in Calcutta under the presidency of the Lieutenant-Governor on the 11th instant it was resolved to illuminate Calcutta on the evening of the 16th February, and to request the Viceroy to proclaim the 16th and 17th February as public holidays.

THE Bombay Town Council have recommended the Corporation to sanction the expenditure of one lakh of rupees in honour of the Queen's Jubilee.

H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT, who was accompanied by the Duchess of Connaught, has left Poona on tour.

H.E. LORD REAY arrived at Kurrachee on the 8th inst., and left on the following evening for Shikarpore, where he opened the Horse Show.

ACCORDING to the latest official estimate 409 persons lost their lives in the Madras fire.

THE Government of Madras have ordered an inquiry into the causes of the fire.

THE annual convocation of the Calcutta University was held on January 8. H.E. the Viceroy was present, and delivered a short speech. The Hon. W. W. Hunter, the Vice-Chancellor, delivered a long address. Two young Native ladies were admitted to the degree of B.A. on the occasion.

At a meeting of the Viceregal Legislative Council on January 7 the Customs Exeise Indian Tariff Acts Amending Bill was introduced. Amongst other features of the measure is the imposition of a duty on perfumed spirits, which have hitherto been imported duty free.

THE Legislative Council for the North-West Provinces and Oudh was formally inaugurated on January 8 with a speech by the Lieutenant-Governor.

As it is expected that military operations in Burma will be practically ended by February, Sir Frederick Roberts leaves Rangoon for Calcutta on the 6th prox, making over the command to Sir Charles Arbuthnot.

THE total economies of the Financial Committee are understood to amount to fifty lakhs, which was about the figure expected to be reached when the committee was formed just a twelvemonth ago.

A FATAL accident occurred on the South Deccan Railway on the 5th inst. A construction train ran over a bullock and all the carriages were derailed. A European fireman, cleaner, and three Natives were killed.

THE Marine Court of Inquiry appointed to investigate the circumstances attending the collision between the s.s. King Arthur and the coasting steamer Zuari in the Bombay harbour on the 18th ult. delivered its judgment on Monday. The Court considered that the collision was caused by the imprudent and reckless use of the port helm by Mr. Speller, the pilot of the King Arthur, and by the neglect of those in charge of the Zuari in not having her lights burning brightly.

A NATIVE firm purposes starting an oil mill in the Hyderabad State under European agency.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE has sanctioned the making of the Nagpur-Bilaspur section of the Bombay-Bengal Railway on the broad gauge. The Southern Mahratta terms have been granted to the promoters.

A SPECIAL loan will probably be floated for the Tounghoo-Mandalay Railway, the capital required being about two millions.

THE officers travelling in the Upper Burma districts report that the feeling of the people and their trust in the British rule and promises have much improved.

THE Burmese Archbishop has sent out several trusted messengers to induce the leading rebel chiefs to submit on the promise of honourable treatment.

DURING December several caravans arrived at Mandalay, the Panthays bringing five hundred pony loads from China, and the Shans a thousand bullock loads of tea from Lhee-baw—a good proof that the trade routes are quieting down. These are the first caravans since the occupation.

Notes of the Week.

THE news from India is still of Jubilee preparations. Calcutta and Bombay have decided to keep holiday on the 16th and 17th February, but Madras preferred at first the genial weather of June for this purpose. However, the "benighted" has now given in to the views of the sister Presidencies.

THE suggestions as to how the Jubilee year can be most fittingly honoured appear to be as numerous and as incongruous in India as in England. The warlike Bengalis would have themselves enrolled as Volunteers, not that the boldest amongst them would fire a shot in defence or defiance if the necessity ever came to do so, but young Bengal has got tired of patent leather shoes, and wishes to strut about in uniform if the paramount power will permit him—which it won't.

It is not very satisfactory to learn that the cause of the bad shooting of the Royal Canadian Regiment at Dum Dum is attributable either to bad ammunition or to worn-out rifles, the military authorities being undecided upon the point. It is said that the inferior quality of the ammunition supplied from the factory of the station was no secret, but the cartridges had been repacked "so as to look like new." This laudable effort, however, did not improve the shooting practice. If this story be true it is not impossible that matters may be equally unsatisfactory at other stations. This is hardly a time when the authorities can complacently look upon the issue of inferior ammunition to the garrisons of India as a matter of no consequence. However, if the rifles are really worn out, perhaps the ammunition in question is safer than stronger powder.

A MILITARY contemporary which is generally well-informed sounds a note of warning regarding the boasted security which it is supposed has resulted from the labours of the Afghan Boundary Commission:—"Boundary marks have been put up, and every explanation given, so that there can be no mistake as to which is Afghan territory and which Russian. The outposts of the two nations understand this, and no danger can arise except by the clashing together of these outposts. So far, so good. But one who has lately returned from the neighbourhood of the Commission's excellent work tells us that the clashing of the outposts will be a very simple matter of arrangement between the Russian and Afghan commanders. Five hundred rupees will do it. This sum given to the latter, with an assurance that no Afghans shall be punished by the former, will bring about an attack whenever the signal is given, and then Russia will have the right to advance her standards. The brave and honest Afghan gentlemen who are guarding their country's interest on the frontier will beat a hasty retreat, leaving the boundary line and its demarcations to Providence and the Muscovite."

THIS is not pleasant reading, but more improbable things have happened than a war brought about for five hundred rupees. The same writer declares, upon the authority of a correspondent who had lately visited Herat, that that city is altogether at the mercy of Russia, who is only waiting her opportunity to enter it. When she does the Afghans will retire. "The gallant defenders of the place have no intention of remaining behind the fortifications which English officers have helped them to raise. Every Afghan soldier who could scrape together sufficient money to do so has, it is said, provided himself with some beast of burden to carry 'Cæsar and his fortunes' to the rear on the first outbreak of hostilities."

THE Indian Press continues to harp upon the vexed question of the Nagpore-Bengal Railway scheme which the Pioneer regrets to hear is still a long way off realisation:—"The promoters want 4 per cent. guaranteed for ten years, and the India Council offer that rate for five years only; with a subsequent guarantee of $3\frac{1}{4}$ per cent., Government taking three-fourths of the surplus net profit. If the project recommends itself sufficiently to deserve a State guarantee in any shape, one cannot understand why the Secretary of State should haggle over a matter of five years in the term for which an extra half per cent. is to be assured to the company."

THE most original idea in connection with the Jubilee is the suggestion of the Native Press that there should be a general gaol delivery throughout India. This is thoroughly Oriental.

(Times Correspondents.)
INDIA.

CALCUTTA, JAN. 30.

The order of the Government appointing the 16th of February as the date for the celebration of the Queen's Jubilee has been favourably received in all parts of India except Madras, where, at a public meeting held some days ago, the opinion was recorded that the 20th of June would be a more appropriate date. The reason assigned was that the memory of the fatal fire on New Year's Eve was too recent to permit the people of Madras to indulge in festivities in February. Now, however, the citizens of the southern capital appear to have made up their minds to join heartily in the general rejoicings next month. Every province and city is now busy with the work of preparation, and the local journals are daily filled with suggestions as to the method of celebrating the occasion. Many of these suggestions are admirable; others are utterly wild and impracticable. Among the latter may be mentioned one that all Government servants should be allowed to count one year's service towards the qualification for pensions; another that a large number of Natives should be admitted to the commissioned ranks of the army; a third, that the restrictions on the admission of Natives as volunteers should be removed, and so on. A proposal which seems to find much favour with the Native newspapers is that, following the precedent set when Her Majesty was proclaimed Empress, a number of prisoners should be released, and it is possible that this will be done. It is understood that a lengthy list of proposed honours prepared by the Government has been sent home for sanction; and it is believed that the distribution of honours among the Native officers of the army will be especially liberal. In this connection it is said that a scheme for the colonisation of Upper Burma may be tried, grants of land being made to pensioned Native officers and Sepoys on condition that they preserve the local peace.

The Viceroy has accepted the suggestion made at the Calcutta meeting, and has decreed that the 16th and 17th of February shall be observed as general holidays. On the afternoon of the 16th he will receive loyal addresses from various public bodies in a pavilion to be pitched on the Maidan. In the evening the city will be illuminated, and there is to be a display of fireworks. Other rejoicings will also be held here—among them, an entertainment to all the school children. At a meeting of the Jubilee Committee, held some days ago, it was resolved, on the motion of the Vice-Chancellor of Calcutta University, Dr. Hunter, to devote the fund to be raised for a permanent memorial partly to the Imperial Institute in London and partly to the establishment of technical education in India on a sound and lasting basis.

The provincial cities will not be outstripped by the capital. The people of Patna propose to found an industrial school, an example which is likely to be followed in many places. The Native chiefs seem determined to vie one with another in displaying their loyalty. The Council of Regency of Gwalior has determined to hold a grand review on the 16th, and to build a college, to be named after the Queen. The Nizam has announced his intention to give a grand banquet, followed by illuminations and fireworks, and to found a "Victoria Hospital for Women." The Maharajah at Mysore proposes to contribute largely to the Imperial Institute in London, and to establish a similar Institute in his own dominions. The intentions of the other rulers of Native States have not yet transpired, but it is not likely that any of them will fail to do honour to the occasion.

The second annual general meeting of Lady Dufferin's fund for providing medical aid to the women of India was held here last Wednesday, the Viceroy presiding. There was a large attendance, including Lords Rosebery and Fife. The Hon. Mr. Peile, in moving the adoption of the report, said that the framework of the association had been formed, and many agencies were extending it, but much remained to be done before it could be called truly national. The Lieutenant-Governor gave an account of the work done in Bengal, and expressed a hope that the three lakhs required to raise the capital to five lakhs might be forthcoming during the Jubilee year. The meeting having passed a vote of thanks to Lady Dufferin, the Viceroy, in acknowledging the vote, said that the best reward she could receive was the hearty support which the movement was obtaining from all classes. The only criticism which he would address to the managers of the fund was that they were too modest in their demands. Considering the task before them, they should talk of fifty and not of five lakhs.

The public inquiry at Madras into the circumstances of the recent fire does not seem so far to have succeeded in eliciting anything definite regarding the origin of the catastrophe, but it has been made clear that although there was a fire-engine at hand, the appliances connected with it were not in proper order and much valuable time was lost before it could be used.

The Public Service Commission has examined a large number of witnesses at Bombay. The general tendencies of the evidence have been to condemn the present system of recruiting for the statutory Native Civil Service, and to insist upon the necessity of retaining the control of the administration in the hands of Englishmen. The main body of the Commission will go this week to Madras and will sit there for about a fortnight, after which it will come to Calcutta. The Bengal sub-committee examined several witnesses of no great importance last week, and is now going to take evidence at Dacca.

The establishment of a Roman Catholic hierarchy in India was proclaimed at Bangalore last Wednesday with great ceremony by the Papal Delegate and several bishops. A large congregation was present, including the British Resident and several Hindoo officials. The Delegate, having been installed on the throne, read an allocution, and his assistants read the Pontifical Brief and the acts of the Synod held in Bangalore. The Archbishop of Pondicherry delivered a Latin discourse. Pivats were then given for the Pope, Cardinal Simeoni, the Delegate, the Queen, and the Maharajah of Mysore, after which a solemn Te Deum brought the ceremony to a close. The Delegate will visit Calcutta shortly.

BURMA.

RANGOON, JAN. 30.

A large and thoroughly representative public meeting was held here yesterday to consider what steps should be taken to celebrate the Queen's Jubilee. It was decided to erect a statue of Her Majesty and a memorial hall, and also to send a donation of Rs. 10,000 to the proposed Imperial Institute.

The Rangoon Gazette announces that the Government has offered rewards for the apprehension of the leaders of the dacoit band which is now disturbing the Prome and Tharrawaddy districts in Lower Burma. The dacoits recently burned the Mahaboung police-station.

The departure of the troops from Upper Burma has been deferred until the 15th of March, as it is considered desirable to continue as long as possible the pursuit by flying columns of the insurgents in the various districts.

The Thebaw Tsawbwa, the most powerful of the northern chiefs in the East of Shanland, has had an interview with Sir C. Bernard at Mandalay. He has visited Mandalay in order to make arrangements for the future government of his own and the surrounding Shan States. It was from this Tsawbwa's capital that the ex-King took his title.

CALCUTTA, JAN. 30.

The Services of Messrs. Barber and Warry of the British Consular Service in China have been placed at the disposal of the Chief Commissioner of Burma for employment in Bhamo or elsewhere on the frontier. These two gentlemen are said to be the best Chinese scholars in the service. Mr. Warry was to have accompanied Mr. Macaulay's mission to Tibet as interpreter, and has been in India for nearly a year back.

MANDALAY, JAN. 30.

On the departure next March of the troops under orders for India, the military force in Burma will consist of four brigades, with headquarters at Mandalay, Ningyau, Myingyan, and Shwebo respectively. Garrisons, with colonels in command, will also be stationed in the Ruby Mines and Chindwin Valley districts, and at Katha and Bhamo.

ANGLO-INDIAN PRESS.

THE INDIAN ASSOCIATION.

(Englishman.)

A deputation from the Indian Association recently awaited the Viceroy at Government House with an address of welcome on his Excellency's return to Calcutta. Foremost among the topics which the Association desired to bring to his Excellency's notice was the reconstitution of the Legislative Councils. Local Self-Government in Bengal had, on the whole, been a success, and the Association ventured to hope it might be extended to the wider concerns of the province, feeling that the time had come for the recognition of the representative system in the Government of this country. In 1885 when complications arose on the North-West frontier, the Indian population had offered to enlist themselves as volunteers, but no answer had been received to the numerous petitions addressed to Government on this subject. The Association desired to call his Excellency's attention to the condition of the coolies in Assam. The disclosures which had been made in the newspaper and courts of law pointed to the necessity of reform in this direction. The time seemed to have come when both Act XIII. of 1859 and Act I. of 1882 might be repealed, and the importation of labour into Assam permitted to be regulated by the law of supply and demand. The Association suggested the appointment of a Commission of Inquiry into the matter. The Association noted with gratitude that the question of technical education had engaged the attention of the Viceroy and recommended the establishment of a technical college in Calcutta. In conclusion, they hoped that it might be permitted the people of India to associate his Excellency's name with a beneficent era of domestic reforms.

The Viceroy replied in the following terms:—"Gentlemen,—I need not say that I am very grateful to you for the kind words with which you have welcomed my return to Calcutta, and that it is always a pleasure to me to enter into communication with persons of such intelligence and distinction as yourselves. I trust that my progress through a considerable portion of the south of India has not been altogether without profit. Though the acquaintance I have made with various important localities has been necessarily superficial, I have, at least, had an opportunity of coming into contact with a great number of gentlemen of standing and influence in their several districts. This in itself has been both a very great pleasure and an unspeakable advantage to me. There are few things that I more prize than the enjoyment of frank personal intercourse with the leading minds of India. In your address you refer to certain questions connected with the administrative machinery of this country; which have, more than once, been brought to my notice, and you seem to expect that I should make some statement on behalf of the Government in regard to them. This is, I think, not altogether a reasonable demand. I have already stated on more than one occasion that the India of to-day is in many respects a different India from that which existed twenty years ago, when the constitution of the Government of India received its present shape. Since then a class of highly-educated men has come into existence—gentlemen who, like yourselves, are well acquainted with the political and economic literature of Europe, who have assimilated Western ideas, and who naturally consider that it would be advantageous to the country if they had an opportunity of becoming more largely associated than has hitherto been the case with their British fellow-subjects in the task of Administration. I fully recognise that this is a very legitimate and laudable ambition, and I must remind you, as I have reminded others, that successive Governments at home have admitted the desirability of re-examining the working of the Act of Parliament of 1858, with the view, it is to be presumed, of ascertaining whether its provisions ought not to be more closely adapted to the altered conditions of the present day. The matter may, therefore, be considered as being sub judice, and a moment's reflection will enable you to understand how impossible it is, under this circumstance, for the Government of India to make any declaration on the subject. Another subject to which you have referred is the question of volunteering in India; but I am a little surprised to find you state simply that the Government has not announced the view it takes of this matter. Nearly a year ago, at Madras, the moment I learned the decision of the Home Government—and you will remember that it was Mr. Gladstone's Government that was then in office—I took the opportunity of publicly announcing the regret I felt in not being able to accede to the wishes of the petitioners. I said that there was no doubt in my mind that their desire to enrol themselves as volunteers was prompted by the purest spirit of loyalty and patriotism; but when the Government of India came to consider the practical methods by which effect could be given to the movement, it very soon became apparent that the difficulties and disadvantages attending the elaboration of any plan for the embodiment of a Volunteer Army altogether outnumbered and outweighed the military and practical advantages to be derived from the realisation of the scheme. Nor can I hold out to you any hope that either the Government at Home or the Government of India will be likely to change its decision. I am glad to see that you duly appreciate the desire of the Government, by the appointment of the Public Service Commission, to re-examine every question connected with the admission of Natives to the Civil Service in a sense favourable to their interests, and the proceedings of that body are in themselves a proof of the thorough and energetic spirit in which the work has been undertaken. It has been a real pleasure to me to learn that you attach due importance to the question of technical education. It is a matter of the utmost moment to this country, and nothing shall be wanting on my part to confirm and widen its basis, and to elevate its superstructure. I intend to spare no endeavours to promote its best interests, but let me assure you that nothing would be further from my thoughts than allow whatever efforts it may be desired to make on behalf of technical education to retard or interfere with that higher education to which you very properly attach so much importance. You have referred also to the subject of coolie labour in Assam. This is a matter to which the Government of India has recently devoted, and is still devoting, a considerable amount of attention. We have accepted in principle that special legislation should be maintained only as long as it is practically necessary for the protection of the two classes concerned, but I am not prepared to say when it will be safe to leave the coolies to the unfettered action of the harsh economic law of supply and demand without any special protection from the administration. The existing procedure may, however, I think, be improved, and for this purpose it is intended to amend the executive rules now in force. In view of the recent inquiries and of the Secretary of State's decision to give Act I. of 1882 a further brief trial, it would be premature at the moment to appoint a Commission, but I may tell you that the working of Act XIII. of 1859 is now under the consideration of the local Government, and that the representations which you have made to me will be carefully examined when the report of the local Government is received."

WHAT IS PROSPERITY?

(Pioneer.)

Dr. Watt's excellent lecture on "The Trade of India and its Future Development"—delivered in London on the 7th of December—must have opened out new horizons before the minds of his audience, and beyond doing this may set the most experienced observers of Indian Industrial problems on new trains of thought. The trade of India, in the usual sense of the phrase—the international trade, the export and import trade—was only one branch, and not the most interesting branch, of the subject brought forward. English economists have, perhaps, fallen too much into the habit of concentrating their attention on exports and imports when they talk about trade. The prosperity of England for the last forty years has been closely bound up with the state of her international commerce, and with the faculty our countrymen have for looking at all questions from their own insular point of view, they have come to regard international trade returns as an index of prosperity not merely for their own country, but also for others very differently circumstanced. Dr. Watt did not start any theory to the effect that foreign trade was unimportant for India. He kept to a very practical tone in his attempt to foreshadow the measures by which the material prosperity of India would best be promoted. And he fell in with the prevailing habits of thought in reference to such topics by dwelling on the magnitude and growth of the external trade of India. This trade last year, he pointed out, amounted to 152 millions sterling—the imports being 67 and the exports 85 millions. Moreover, he showed that this trade was chiefly with the United Kingdom, Indian imports thence being 41½ millions, and exports thither 34½ millions. The great mercantile mind of Great Britain ought to value a relationship which enables the "workshop of the world" to get rid of over forty millions worth of stock a year. But the really interesting view of Indian prospects brought before the mind by the lecture under notice has to do, not with the international trade, but with the internal industries of India, and with questions that concern their future growth.

The grand array of proposals for the expansion of Indian manufactures which Mr. Watt marshalled before his hearers may not have suggested to him the inferences that will perhaps be drawn by others. Or the lecturer may have been too prudent to work out such inferences before an audience that would probably have looked on them as heretical. But one can hardly avoid being struck by the reflection that if India is really in a position to carry on the manufactures which Dr. Watt points out as well within her reach, is it not to the further development of her trade with England, or with any other part of the world, that she has to look for her future prosperity, but to the realisation of her capacity for becoming in all industrial respects a self-sufficing division of the world's population. Why, began Dr. Watt, when he set to work to review the various openings for the expansion of Indian industry, why should India export oil-seeds instead of setting up her own oil-mills and keeping the oil for her own use and the oil-cake to feed her own cattle? Last year she imported nearly fifty millions sterling worth of vegetable oil from the United Kingdom and thirty millions worth from Ceylon. She originally possessed the raw material for making all this herself. Why should she have to import, as she did last year, two millions worth of manufactured iron? Few countries in the world have a more abundant supply of pure iron ores. Why does not India make her own glass and pottery? She has all the required material and facilities. Last year India imported over £860,000 worth of chemicals and drugs. Most of these could have been manufactured in the country. Many smaller imports were shown to be even more unreasonable. Saffron was imported from France, for instance, to the value of £44,594, though the plant is wild in Kashmir and other parts of the Western Himalayas, and might be cultivated to any extent. Why did not India make her own soap and candles? Certainly she makes some; there is one soap factory in existence; but a great deal of soap is imported which could easily be made in the country. Of lace and patent net India imported last year £56,562 worth. With a little encouragement India might easily come to export lace to Europe.

And, supposing she did all these things, would she be better off or worse? At the first glance everyone will be inclined to say that it is clearly more economical to do something that has to be done for yourself than to pay some one else to do it for you. And in great national affairs the matter need not be complicated as it would be in private life by the reflection that perhaps you can put your own time to a better use. In the matter of oil-seeds, for example, we evidently need not assume that every one of the 252 millions of the Indian population is so profitably employed at present that it would not pay him to engage in oil-pressing. If it pays European firms to do this for Indian, most assuredly it would pay Indian firms too—as far as the question of available labour is concerned. But if the Indian people really would be better off in the aggregate by doing everything they can for themselves, instead of employing foreigners to do it for them, what becomes of all the economical theories which measure the prosperity of a nation by the activity of its export and import trade? Those theories—the long-established dominant theories of trade—proceed on the principle that it is best to buy all you want in cheap foreign markets, and employ yourself in producing on a scale far exceeding your own wants something that you can sell cheap in foreign markets. If that view be as entirely trustworthy as the legislation of England would lead us to suppose it, then can Dr. Watt be right in urging India to cultivate to the utmost the industries which would supply her own wants, and enable her to dispense with foreign imports. Imagine his programme carried out to the full, and the foreign trade of his country might contract to very small proportions—which would not be a result conducive to the satisfaction of the British manufacturer. Indeed it is clearly conceivable that a country as great as this—including so many varieties of climate and population—might really supply all its own wants and get annually richer without having any foreign trade at all. Fanciful luxuries would still no doubt be exchanged with other lands, but there would be no purpose to serve in exchanging the products of industry on a large scale. Whether that would be the ideal condition for a great country to reach is a question that will be differently answered by rival theorists. It is the condition towards which all the principal countries of the Western world, except Great Britain, are endeavouring to press forward. It is to cultivate internal self-reliance—the self-sufficing character of a State that can make everything it wants within its own territory, and is thus spared what the Continental economists regard as the loss incurred by employing the foreigner—that Germany, France, the United States, and other Powers hedge themselves round with heavy import duties. The British economist still continues, on the other hand, to believe in the system of living on foreign trade. We do not want to open the whole controversy apropos to Dr. Watt's lecture, but it would be neglecting a view of things that is calculated to throw some light on that controversy if we overlooked the connection between it and the question whether India ought to make her own soap and vegetable oils, and pick her own saffron instead of bringing it from France.

THE Lahore paper hears that Umar Buksh, the khitmatgar who made a murderous assault on a lady at Dharmasala in November, has been tried at Kangra by the Sessions Judge, and was sentenced to transportation for life—a richly deserved punishment.

THE RUBY MINES EXPEDITION.

(Pioneer Correspondent.)

As the force under Brigadier-General Stewart has reached the Ruby Mines at Mogouk, or Mojok, as it is called, it may be of interest to describe somewhat in detail the movements which have led to the occupation of the district. A correspondent writing in December said:—

"There are several routes to the Ruby Mines district, of which the principal towns are Mogouk and Kyapyen. After due consideration it was decided that the Twinge route, known as the Tsawbwa's road, was the best suited for the expedition; but, as steamers cannot get anywhere near Twinge on account of sand-banks, a place called Kyan-Nhyat, about fifteen miles higher up the Irrawaddy, was fixed upon for the river base, and on the 19th of September a force, consisting of a company of the Hampshire Regiment, a company of the 43rd Gurkha Light Infantry, and a company of the Madras Sappers and Miners, the whole under the command of Captain Barnett, R.E., proceeded by the Sladen to Kyan-Nhyat, and camped there. A bamboo fence and wall inside it were next run up all round, and huts built for the troops. In the meantime Major Skene, 43rd G.L.I., had arrived and taken over command, and on the 15th October a reconnoitring party, consisting of thirty men of the Hampshire Regiment under Lieut. Gill, and thirty men of the 43rd Gurkhas, the whole under Captain Barnett, R.E., started for Sagadounng. Mr. Carter, deputy commissioner, and Dr. Sykes accompanied the party. Four days' marching brought the force to Sagadounng, at the foot of the hills, a distance of about forty miles from Kyan-Nhyat. The road in places was very bad for carts, and occasionally a broken axle-tree caused a delay of an hour or so while the cartman fashioned a new one out of the nearest tree with his dah; and among other difficulties which had to be overcome may be mentioned the extreme reluctance of the civil officer to getting up at the unearthly hour of 4 A.M., and the continual stoppages of the sapper to inspect a whole shopful of aneroid barometers, which travelled in state all the way in a doolie. The first five miles of the road, or, more properly speaking, the track, go nearly due south from Kyan-Nhyat, and the remainder nearly due east. On first turning to the east the road enters jungle, and continues to run through it the whole of the rest of the way to Sagadounng, the jungle being sometimes thick bamboo and sometimes open trees: All the villages were found to be deserted, having been destroyed in disturbances which occurred two years ago.

"Sagadounng and a strip of territory extending to Twinge on the Irrawaddy belong to the Tsawbwa of Momeik (Momeit on our maps), who is a semi-independent prince. The town of Momeit is about twenty-five miles beyond Sagadounng. At the latter place one of the Tsawbwa's ministers met the Civil Officer and made all sorts of professions of friendship. The party returned to Kyan-Nhyat in safety, and a few days later the company of Sappers left in order to work on the road, being joined a fortnight later by Maj. Skene with a force of Gurkhas. In the meantime the company of the Hampshire had been relieved by two companies of the King's Own Light Infantry, under Captain Earle, and Colonel Cubitt, V.C., who commands the expedition, arrived with the remainder of his regiment, the 43rd Gurkhas; and two screw guns under Lieut. Eyre, R.A., and a company of Bengal Sappers and Miners under Lieut. Petrie, R.E., were sent a little later. As there were reports that the Shans at Mogouk had determined to attack us and endeavour to stop the expedition, one company of the King's Own Light Infantry, and the two guns were sent out to strengthen Major Skene; the Bengal Sappers had gone on to work on the road immediately upon their arrival. By this time, the middle of November, a great deal of sickness, chiefly fever, had occurred, especially among the Madras Sappers, who have been in Burma for more than a year; and a few days later there were so many of them on the sick list that it was considered best to send the whole company back to Kyan-Nhyat. Of course, this sickness was only what was to be expected, as everybody is perfectly well aware that a country covered with jungle at the foot of the hills is certain to be very feverish until it has had time to dry properly after the rains, and last year there was heavy rain as late as the first week in November. It is hoped that as soon as the troops ascend the hills they will become more healthy.

"On the 16th November the whole of the advanced force had camped at a place about eighteen miles from Kyan-Nhyat, and the next morning a party of the Gurkhas, who had started for a camping ground two miles further on, were suddenly fired upon when coming out of the bed of a small stream. We learnt afterwards that this was a party of Shans who had come down from Mogouk to oppose our advance. We came upon them unexpectedly at breakfast, so they just let off their guns and ran away. However, as we were not ready to go forward altogether to the next camp, the intention being only to cut the jungle on it and then return, Major Skene decided to go back and wait until all the force was ready to go on. Three days later the advance was made, nothing having been seen or heard of the enemy in the meantime, except one shot which was fired at one of the Gurkhas who formed the covering party for the Sappers while working on the road. The Gurkha had a narrow shave, as the bullet just grazed his neck, making a very slight scratch. We hardly expected to see the enemy again, as they were treated to a pretty hot fire at our first encounter; but, just before reaching the place where they were before, the flanking parties of the advanced guard came suddenly upon a lot of Shans, who were lying down in readiness to fire upon us as we came along the road. However, the flankers quite upset their calculations, and the Gurkhas were upon them in no time. Several Shans were killed and wounded, but most got away in the thick jungle. As we went along the bed of the stream, along which the road goes for about 200 yards, there was a good deal of firing, principally upon our flank. Where the road goes up out of the stream—it was stuck full of pointed bamboos—a short stand was made; but as soon as the Shans found that the flankers were getting round them they all bolted, and we saw nothing more of them. The whole of the fighting on our side was confined to the advanced guard, which consisted of twenty-five of the King's Own Light Infantry, and fifty of the Gurkhas under Lieutenant Williams. The only casualty on our side was a Gurkha who got a cut on the hand from a dah. We heard afterwards that the Shans lost 18 killed and several wounded. There were altogether about 500 of them, and they got such a lesson that they say they will never stand against us again. On the same morning the advanced guard of a convoy was fired upon about 6 miles further back, and unfortunately a Gurkha was killed, being shot through the head.

"On the 29th November the force reached Sagadoun and encamped there. The Sappers have finished a cart bridge over the Sagadoun river, which is about 40 yards wide and 3 or 4 feet deep at this time of year. The end of the cart road will be a couple of miles beyond Sagadoun, and a small entrenched position with godowns for stores is being made there. The ascent of the hills cannot be commenced until a sufficient quantity of commissariat stores has been collected at the foot; and this is not such an easy matter, as there is a good deal of trouble in getting carriage. There has all through been a great want of both carts and coolie labour; in fact, coolies are hardly obtainable out of Kyan Nhyat, and even if any are induced to go out for work along the road they invariably bolt after a day or two. However, the Sappers have made the road pretty fair, and convoys get through with very little trouble as far as Sagadoun; and we hope that by about the 20th December all the stores will be ready, and we shall be able to make a start for Mogouk, which appears from all accounts to be some thirty miles distant."

The same correspondent writing on December 6th said:—

"There is not much to chronicle since last I wrote. Stores are arriving almost daily, and we must now pretty nearly have the month's supply which was to be collected before leaving. Sagadoun is now quite a small village, but at one time it was an important place, judging from the extent of ground which it formerly occupied; there are a large number of the teakwood posts, with which Burmans build their houses, still standing, and a great many more have been taken by the Sappers to build the bridge over the river. On a low hill on the opposite side of the river there are the ruins of an old city which the Burmans say existed hundreds of years ago, the terraces on which the houses were built, and the mounds of brick marking the sites of pagodas, are still quite distinguishable in the midst of the thick bamboo jungle.

"On the 11th Captain Barnett, R.E., with a party of fifty Gurkhas, under Captain Barrett, started for a reconnaissance up the hills. The ascent commences two and a-half miles beyond Sagadoun and from that point the rise is almost constant: there are level bits every now and then, but in many places it is a very steep pull up, and I do not envy the transport mules their job. For about three miles the road winds in and out of hills covered with thin tree jungle; after that one enters thick jungle composed of bamboo, grass, and bushes of all sorts. The first sign of being on higher ground was a lot of white jessamine, but otherwise there was no change noticeable in the vegetation. This was, however, only natural, as the height of Looykan, which was reached about 9.30, is only some 2,000 feet above the sea. This is one of the halting-places ordinarily made use of by the Burmese, as there are several small streams of water; at many places on the road streams can be heard rushing down below, but the jungle prevents these being seen, and they must be hundreds of feet lower than where the road runs.

"After a short halt a further advance was made, but about a mile further on the advance guard suddenly reported that there were some armed Shans just on ahead. There was nothing to show whether these were friends or foes, so the party waited to see, which proved to be a great pity, as if we had known that they were going to fire at us, which they shortly proceeded to do, we might have opened the shooting and made a good bag of them. Afterwards it was too late, as they all got under cover. Some desultory firing on both sides ensued, and then the Gurkhas, after firing a volley, charged up the ridge, but found it deserted. Flanking parties were sent well out on both sides, and the advance continued; but very slowly, as the hills were covered with long grass and jungle, and the flankers made very little progress. A few shots were fired by Shans hidden in different places; so as there seemed to be a good many of them about, and orders had been given that fighting was, if possible, to be avoided, it was determined to return, and the party got back to camp at 4 p.m. Since then we have heard that the ex-lessees of the mines at Mogouk have got together some 500 Shans to stop our advance; and they say that they pay them one rupee each per day, and two rupees on fighting days. A day or two after the Sappers were blasting rocks and trees along the road: the Shans evidently thought we were firing off our big guns to try to frighten them, for they began "loosing off" theirs in return. Brigadier-General Stewart, who is commanding the Expedition, arrived at Sagadoun, accompanied by Major Neville Chamberlain, Deputy Assistant Adjutant and Quartermaster-General, on the 17th. Also on the same date came Captain Lloyd, R.A., with two Gardner guns, and a company of the Yorkshire Regiment, under Major White: this latter company is to garrison Sagadoun.

"The advance is to be made on the 19th, when fifty of the Yorkshire, from Captain Earle's company, 160 Gurkhas, the Gardner guns, and the company of Bengal Sappers and Miners start early for Looykan. These troops form the advanced half of the force, and will be under Colonel Cubitt, V.C. On the 20th the rest of the company of the Yorkshire and the remainder of the Gurkhas follow. We hope to reach Mogouk in six or seven days, halting probably three times between here and there. The Civil Officer, Mr. Carter, has got a good deal of information about the position, &c., taken up by the enemy, and we are all hoping we shall find him at home in them, and that he will not, as usual, vanish into thin air (or jungle) at our approach.

"In conclusion I may mention that there is now less sickness, so it is hoped that the worst of the unhealthy season is over."

The advance up the hill was, as our telegrams have shown, made without any opposition; and Mogouk was occupied on the 27th inst.

BENGAL.

A CIRCULAR ORDER issued by the Bengal Board of Revenue announces that the Government has the right of fishery in all navigable rivers, which are public property, unless the right has been granted or leased to some individual. In regard, however, to tidal rivers, it may sometimes be expedient that the exclusive right of fishery should not be granted to private individuals or to certain classes of individuals to the exclusion of the general public, and no lease of such a fishery is to be granted without the sanction of the Board.

The report of the Directors of the East Indian Railway Co., referring to the Hughli Bridge, states that the directors have been in communication with the Secretary of State upon the subject of the access of the company to Calcutta after the opening of the bridge. After mature consideration the directors have resolved to waive for the present their former proposal for separate access to Calcutta by a line under their sole control, but they entertain a confident hope that they will be able to make arrangements with the Secretary of State for India for running powers over the Eastern Bengal Railway line on terms which, they say, will allow of the development of the purpose that they have always kept in view in the construction of the bridge.

The value of the tea industry in Assam is well shown in the fact that the export of tea from that province constitutes nearly three-fourths of its export trade in the matter of value. Of a total export trade in 1885-86, estimated at something over 431 lakhs of rupees, the export of tea is valued at over 300 lakhs. This sum represents 605,769 maunds of tea. The value of the tea exports in 1884-85 is given at 277 lakhs, and the quantity at 554,614 maunds. There was thus a satisfactory increase both in quantity and value during the twelve months.

MADRAS.

THE SHERIFF OF MADRAS has advertised a reward of five hundred rupees for the discovery and conviction of the incendiaries at the recent fire at Madras, as he shares the common belief that the fire was not the result of accident, the Police Commissioner's opinion notwithstanding.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE for India having sanctioned the construction, through the agency of his Highness the Nizam's State Railway Company, of the extension, of the Nizam's State Railway from the frontier of his Highness's dominions to Bezawada, his Excellency the Governor-General in Council is pleased to place the supervision of the construction work under the Government of Madras.

THE Bank of Madras has declared a dividend for the half-year ending 31st ultimo, at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum, after adding Rs. 50,000 to the reserve fund, which is now brought up to Rs. 9,75,000 (for the first half of the twelve months half a lakh was added to the fund, so the addition for the year was one lakh). The sum of Rs. 37,023 is carried forward to the present half year. The earnings during 1886 represented no less than 10½ per cent. on the capital. In the second half the profit was Rs. 2,20,000, whilst for several years past the average profit for the corresponding six months was about Rs. 1,25,000. The bank continued to be fortunate in its board of directors and in its secretary; and while, on the one hand, it profited largely by the dearth of money, it enjoyed, on the other—thanks to judicious management—immunity from losses.

BOMBAY.

It is reported that the Nizam proposes to appoint Colonel Marshall Secretary of the Council of State as well as Private Secretary and Adviser.

DURING the last quarter of 1886 H.H. the Maharajah of Mysore became a life Councillor of the Countess of Dufferin's Fund by subscribing a sum of Rs. 7,500. Nine life members were also enrolled, four of them coming from Bombay, namely, the Thakore Sahib of Koth, the Desai of Patri, Mr. Dadabhoi Hormusjee Dubash, and Syed Saheb Musa Mia Hemadali. The subscriptions received in India amounted to Rs. 4,064, and in England to £46 8s.

TANTIA BHEEL, the Robin Hood of the Central Provinces, is a much more elusive subject than the most accomplished Burmese dacoit. His latest exploit was committed at the village of Dholgaum, in the Hurda district, where, in addition to carrying away a considerable amount of loot, he is reported to have wounded a milkman and burnt two of his huts. The Assistant Commissioner went in pursuit with a body of police, but Tantia had by then betaken himself to "fresh woods and pastures new."

It is announced that Mr. John Bocarro, head assistant to the Director of Public Instruction in this Presidency, will shortly retire after a service of nearly 43 years in the Educational Department. Mr. Bocarro entered the service of Government in 1844 as Head Clerk to the Board of Education. On the abolition of the Board's office in 1857 Mr. Bocarro's services were placed at the disposal of Mr. C. J. Erskine, C.S., the First Director of Public Instruction. He has since served under several educational chiefs, including Mr. Howard, Sir Alexander Grant, Major-General T. Waddington, the Hon. J. B. Peile, Mr. Lee-Warner, and Mr. Chatfield.

An Austrian, at present in Secunderabad, has addressed H.E. the Nawab Salar Jung praying for the concession of the exclusive right of navigating the Godavary and its tributaries within the limits of these dominions for a term of 51 years. The concessionaire undertakes to build 10 steam launches, 60 cargo boats, and floats; the last to be used in the reaches where steam launches and cargo boats cannot ply. He also asks for permission to cut down teak timber in the adjacent forests by payment of the usual royalty, for the construction of his boats, &c. The concessionaire further undertakes to pay to Government 2½ per cent. on the value of all produce and other goods exported by means of his vessels, and 5 per cent. on all imports similarly carried.

NORTH-WEST PROVINCES, OUDH, AND PUNJAB.

THE first report on the prospects of the wheat crop in the Punjab is as follows:—"Estimated area under wheat this year 6,857,000 acres, or two per cent. less than last year. Rain fell in October only in the districts near the hills. In most other districts the sowings are short."

THE Legislative Council for the North-West Provinces held its first meeting in the Thornhill Library on Saturday. Sir Alfred Lyall gracefully sought to give the credit for the institution of the Council to his predecessors, but the Pioneer says that had it not been for the vigour and persistency with which he urged these claims, they might have remained in the background for another twenty years. For the rest, the business on Saturday was purely formal, except that Mr. Quinton very appropriately introduced a Bill for shortening the language of Council Acts. May it be an augury of brevity and wisdom in all the Council transactions!

THE area irrigated in the Punjab during the year 1885-86 was 1,787,167 acres, against 1,615,288 acres in the previous year. The increase was due to an extension of 128,595 acres from the Bari Doab Canal, and 116,735 acres by the Sirhind Canal, while the Swat River Canal, which was only opened in February, 1885, irrigated 44,902 acres. On the other hand, there was a decrease of 55,586 acres in the irrigation from the Western Jumna Canal, and of 60,527 acres from the inundation Canals. The total capital invested by the Government was Rs. 5,52,99,891, to which must be added Rs. 1,18,67,230 contributed by the Native States to the Sirhind Canal. Of these totals Rs. 32,63,317 was spent on the Swat River Canal, which is classed as a famine relief and insurance work. The net revenue on the capital invested was, by assessment, a profit of Rs. 0.12, but according to the collections there was an actual loss of Rs. 0.82 per cent. The gross revenue collected was Rs. 25,61,018, the assessment being Rs. 30,80,956. The working expenses amounted to Rs. 13,22,049, and the charge for interest was Rs. 16,35,652, thus showing a loss of Rs. 6,96,583 on the invested capital. The Lieutenant-Governor takes the opportunity of the receipt of this report to express his sense of the care and ability with which the Irrigation Department has been administered by Colonel R. Home, who has since retired, and of the benefits which have resulted from the numerous works of irrigations which he has initiated and carried out during his long period of service.

THE net receipts from stamps in the North-West Provinces and Oudh last year were Rs. 58,89,575, being an increase of Rs. 1,10,000 over the previous year. The sale of general stamps realised Rs. 14,07,089, and those from Court-fee stamps Rs. 44,82,486. The income of the year was the highest ever yet obtained, and this is attributable to the fact that there were no abnormal circumstances to disturb the revenue, as the year was, on the whole, a prosperous one for the agricultural classes, although the commercial classes suffered from the depression of trade. There was a considerable falling off in the sale of hoondi stamps, which is attributed to the fact that the transmission of money by hoondis is gradually being superseded by post office money-orders and telegraphic remittances.

THERE is some talk of resuscitating the Provincial Bank of India. Since it stopped payment in April last, a number of debts that were considered to be bad have been realised, and some which were doubtful are in course of realisation, and at the present moment matters look so satisfactory that it is intended to hold a meeting soon to consider the question of reopening the Bank.

NATIVE PRESS.

THE JUBILEE YEAR.

The sum of Rs. 80,000 which, according to report, the Municipality are about to spend on a permanent memorial in honour of the Queen's Jubilee, is, in our opinion, not enough. Do not let them fritter away their cash balance of five lakhs in small unimportant things. The best plan would be to give away all the five lakhs for a Technical College and a Female Medical School, which are badly wanted here. You may then safely spend your Rs. 20,000 on illuminations.—Bombay Samachar.

Some members of the Corporation have acquired a taste for spending other peoples' money on illuminations. The proposal to spend a lakh on the occasion of the Jubilee is, in our opinion, wasteful, extravagant, and unnecessary expenditure. The public ought to raise a strong protest against this wanton waste of money barbarously raised from peoples' food and necessities. We are glad that the Bombay Gazette has raised the first cry against this, and we are quite sure the whole Press will support it. It is not the Municipality that must come forward to show loyalty to the Queen. It is the duty of the public in which the Municipality may take a small share.—Rast Gofar.

The Indu Prakash says:—"The Jubilee has now been officially announced to be celebrated on Wednesday, February 17. The necessity of celebrating it with all due edat is admitted on all hands, and it is time the committee appointed by the local corporation set about the work earnestly. It is said the committee proposes an expenditure of one lakh of rupees out of the municipal funds alone, Rs. 80,000 being proposed to be applied to the foundation of a permanent institution as a Jubilee memorial, and Rs. 20,000 to be spent in illuminations and other forms of temporary demonstration. The foundation of a permanent institution is an excellent proposal. A public lecture hall or a picture gallery is a great want in Bombay, and will be a most acceptable Jubilee memorial. But the cost of the institution should not wholly be thrown on the municipal funds. One lakh is much too large a sum to be spared by our Municipality with an estimated saving of four lakhs at the end of the year. The Municipality ought to bear its fair share of expenses, but voluntary contributions from the public ought to supply the major portion. If the public are properly approached we have no doubt ample funds will be forthcoming. A public meeting ought to be held, as indeed it is intended to do, and every measure should be taken to interest the whole public in the movement. The Jubilee must be celebrated in Bombay in a manner befitting the wealth and public spirit of the capital of Western India. A fair on the Esplanade, like the one held during the Duke of Connaught festivities, and concentrated illuminations in one place instead of frittering away the illuminations over the whole town will, we think, be the best way of popular rejoicing.

THE CALCUTTA CONGRESS.—Some of the details of the representative scheme, as expressed in one of the Resolutions, are open to serious objections. That the members of the Supreme Council should be elected by the members of the Provincial Councils is a proposal which we cannot view with favour. It seems to be opposed to the first principles of representative Government. We are not aware of any considerable system of self-government where a similar method of electing members of the highest assembly has been followed. There is only one historic scheme in which the method was attempted, and there it ended most disastrously. We refer to the scheme of the National Assembly which was constituted by the Revolutionists of 1789. The entire system, set forth in Resolution, with its electoral colleges, its ascending tiers of elected assemblies, its manifold qualifications, cannot help reminding us of the proceedings in France towards the close of the last century. But the French system did not answer. If details had to be mentioned at all, we wish they had been settled upon the model, not of political institutions in France or religious institutions in Italy, but of the system which has answered so well in England or the system which is so much admired in the United States.—The Indian Nation.

H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT AT RAJKOT.—We hear that the Political Agent of Kathiawar has issued invitations to the Chiefs of that Province to proceed to Rajkot to meet H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught. Of course the invitation will be responded to, but evidently no account is made of the hardships these Chiefs will have to undergo, and the money they will have to spend on account of this tamasha. It is certainly too much to ask them to go back to a place from where they have just returned. The Political Agent must know that the Royal Duke goes to Rajkot in his capacity of the Commander-in-Chief of the Bombay Army, and not as a Prince of the reigning family. It is probable that he himself may not approve of the arrangement if it is duly brought to his notice.—Jam-i-Jamshed.

THE REFORM OF THE LEGISLATIVE COUNCILS.—The resolution about representative councils seems somewhat to overshoot the mark. The powers of the councils prayed for are reasonable enough. There is no resolution attempted, as has been represented, in the disposition of the powers of the Executive Government. The councils will be only consultative, and they will have no power beyond assisting and advising the Government, and seeking information about Government measures in a constitutional manner as the Native Press has all along been urging they should be. The cloud raised by the Englishman about the councils doing the real work of Government and the Executive Government doing only police duty and mounting guard on the treasury and the frontiers is thoroughly gratuitous. It is as regards the numbers of the elected and nominated, the official and non-official members of the council that, we think, the demand is not quite moderate. But the extravagance of the demand ought not to prejudice our course. It is no ground for total rejection, as the Gazette seems to think. The Government ought to view it as the maximum of our aspirations, and may grant us as much of it as it thinks reasonable. From the observations which fell from the Viceroy's lips in his reply to the Indian Association there is reason to think that a moderate reform is not unacceptable in the highest quarters. On the whole, the work done by the Congress is, notwithstanding all detractors, such as any body of enlightened men may well be gratified with, and India is to be congratulated on the growth of public spirit and political intelligence in her sons, as evidenced by the Congress. Our earnest hope is that the work so well begun may be carried on in successive years with equal ardour, sobriety and good sense, and that future congresses may give us fresh opportunities to express similar congratulations to our country and our countrymen.—Indu Prakash.

Miscellaneous.

Among the documents registered last year in Assam was one of a somewhat novel character. A Muhammadan, who was given to opium-eating, married; but on the lady's relatives objecting to his evil habits, he entered into this curious compact:—"I do hereby declare that I was in the habit of eating opium which I left off since two years; but as you do not believe me I enter into this agreement, the conditions of which are, that if you see me ever eating opium, or get sufficient proof of my doing so, your sister will be at liberty to break off her marriage with me, and I shall relinquish all claim upon her." Unfortunately for the good intentions of this maligned individual, the attempt to turn the Registration Department into an agency for the promotion of testotal principles was declared to be illegal, and the document was pronounced null and void.

ANGLO-INDIANS very generally drink light wines, especially Bordeaux clarets. Since the introduction of the Australian wines from the Château Tahbilk Vineyard, the preference has been given to these wines, on account of their absolute purity, bouquet, and invigorating qualities, and especially because they come direct from the vineyard situated on the Goulburn river, Melbourne, direct to the sole London dépôt, Lower Belgrave-street, Grosvenor-gardens. These spacious cellars, which are all on the ground-floor, and built on the Bordeaux plan, afford fine ventilation and great convenience for tasting and sampling. Many civilians prefer these wines to any other, and in India the wines have obtained a high reputation, and are patronised by General Sir Frederick Roberts, Sir Samuel Browne, and others who prefer the unadulterated juice of the grape to fortified wines, as being better suited to the climate. A contemporary says, "Australia cannot too soon begin to scorn all pretence of imitation and be herself. She may form her own school of taste, and this is being rapidly done." The Château Tahbilk holds a foremost place for having introduced into England pure high-class Australian wines.

THE Hon. Mr. Reynolds, whose term of office in the Bengal Legislative Council expired on the 8th, has been reappointed.

MR. P. O'KINEALY has resigned the office of Reporter for the Indian Law Reports in the Calcutta High Court, and Mr. K. M. Chatterjee has been appointed in his stead.

SIR LEPEL GRIFFIN has entrusted Mr. J. Lockwood Kipling, C.I.E., with the designing of the Memorial Hospital about to be erected at Gwalior to the memory of the late Maharajah Scindiah. The cost of the work will amount to several lakhs of rupees, and will afford the Lahore School of Art, which did so well with the design for the Aitchison College, an opportunity of showing what more they can do in applying Eastern architectural resources to Western requirements. An up country paper remarks that should Sir Lepel Griffin only remain in Central India long enough to start the various public buildings at Gwalior which are likely to signalise the minority of its future chief, there is every hope "that no fresh addition will be made to the large list of such buildings springing from the regulation source, which help to discredit the artistic perceptions of the English race."

OFFICERS IN THE FIELD.—We hear nothing more of the movement for re-arming the officers of the army, and teaching them the use of their weapons. Yet in what army is it more essential than in ours that every fighting man should be efficient? Surely our fighting strength is small enough without having 3 per cent. of inefficient—say thirty officers per battalion of 900 strong. It is probable that the infantry soldiers will soon have bayonets which will render them really formidable at close quarters. Cavalry troopers and artillery men may presently obtain revolvers, and be thus rendered capable of protecting themselves; for, doubtless, they will be trained in the use of these weapons, as our rank and file generally are in the use of their firearms. Is it not ridiculous, then, in an army whose weakness compels it to bring into the ranks the very bandsmen, that the officers alone should be regarded as non-combatants, or expected to learn by intuition how to defend themselves with an equipment unsuited to the purpose? We may admit that it is not primarily the business of the officers to be shooting the enemy down or engaging in single combats. They will be employed to better purpose in leading on and directing their men, and looking out for orders, and for opportunities of effective action without orders. Nevertheless, the occasion must frequently arise, especially in our army, which is so much engaged in unscientific warfare, for officers to set an example of personal prowess, or at any rate to defend their lives. We require in our officers an efficiency for personal encounters which cannot come to them by nature any more than horsemanship. By polite fiction, every English gentleman is supposed to be able to ride, yet, nevertheless, all in the mounted branches are carefully taught equitation over again in the schools. Without, therefore, in any way casting a doubt upon the complete ability of its officers to choose and handle their weapons, the Government may furnish them with regulation weapons of a certain standard of efficiency (charging them for the same, of course), and may put them through a course of instruction in their use—annually testing their efficiency, as in the case of equitation.—Civil and Military Gazette.

THE "Simla Bank Libel Case," as it is known, has been concluded. It was a case wherein Mr. Francis, an ex-agent of the Bank, sued the above Corporation for Rs. 10,000 damages, for a libel alleged to have been contained in an advertisement which appeared in this and other papers publishing the fact of his dismissal. The District Court of Lahore, in which the suit was instituted in June last, and twice postponed, has now dismissed the action with costs, holding the pleas of justification and privilege set up by the Bank to have been completely established. Mr. Spitta, of the Chief Court Bar, appeared for the plaintiff; Mr. Rattigan, Advocate-General, for the Bank. The Allahabad paper remarks that the "conclusion inevitably suggested by such of the evidence—and that the material portion of it—as has yet appeared is that, Mr. Francis must have aggravated the folly of taking his case into Court by failing to disclose all its bearings to his advisers; or the skilful counsel who represented him would certainly have discouraged his embarking on an action which bore defeat on the face of it."—Bombay Gazette.

LORD ROSEBURY'S recent visit to the Peshin frontier serves (says the Pioneer) to illustrate in a remarkable way the change that has come over that part of the world. His lordship travelled from Sibi up the Bolan Pass to within a short distance of the Khojak, halted a day at Quetta, and came back by the Hurnai route, thus covering comfortably a distance of about 325 miles in four days. But a short time ago the same journey would have taken at least twenty-five days' hard marching. But, though the railway is open, they are not yet satiated with travelling notabilities in Beluchistan, and Lord Rosebery was received with great demonstrations on his way back through Sibi. The place was decorated with flags and arches, and the Khan of Khelat's Vakil and a number of Pathan, Beluch, and Brahni Sirdars of the neighbourhood were in attendance to interview the illustrious visitor.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

THE NATIONAL REVIEW.*

This number of the National could not open with a more appropriate subject than a Threnodia on that trust of Conservatives, the late Stafford Henry Northcote, Earl of Iddesleigh. Viscount Cranbrook speaks with authority, in his affectionate "Tribute from a Colleague," as to the "nobility, generosity, and amiability which marked his career," and some passable verses by Mr. Austin express sentiments concerning him, in which all who knew him will concur.

From the past, our attention is called to the immediate future in Mr. Hubbard's uncompromising article on "The Church and Dissent." Mr. Hubbard plainly states the position of the Church; and, not less plainly, the real objects of Dissent, which are betrayed by the bitter and unchristian tone in which Dissenters speak of the Church. To give but one instance, in which a saying of one Dr. Binney, to the effect "that the Church of England had damned more souls than she had saved" was quoted by an Anglican clergyman at a "Conference" held in Holborn. The speaker was instantly "put down" by the chairman, a Mr. Guinness Rogers, with the assertion that Binney had made no such unqualified statement. Yet this "correction" is corrected by the exact words used by Dr. Binney, which are here (p. 735) printed in extenso! It is a charitable, may we hope a reasonable, supposition that Mr. Rogers did not know what he was talking about, though he had not the candour, when his mistake—if indeed it was a mistake—was exposed, to acknowledge that he was in the wrong. But this is a very fair sample of the manner in which defenders of the Church may expect to be treated if they enter Dissenting "Conferences"; and, we may add, of the ingenuousness in statement of nine-tenths of the charges brought against the Church. Mr. Hubbard puts the whole matter into a nutshell. Dissenting preachers are aware of their inferior social status to that held by the clergy, and want to "level"—not upwards, for to the status of a clergyman of the Church they cannot hope to rise, but—downwards. The writer appropriately quotes De Tocqueville: "Equality is an expression of envy. It means, in the real heart of every Republican, no one shall be better off than myself."

Whatever Colonel Malleon writes is sure to be worth reading; and his article on the rivalry of England and Russia is no exception. We face the Northern Encroacher "all along the line;" and Colonel Malleon wishes us to repair the scandalous neglect, owing to which, in 1856, we abandoned the Caucasian tribes to the pitiless vengeance of Russia, by inciting the tribes to rebellion, and thus breaking the enemy's centre. We fear that the tribes are too cowed by Russian brutality to be as useful as could be wished: nor does it seem to us that the gallant writer has adequately recognised the fact, that the Russians would not be wholly inactive while our designs, however well planned, were being carried into execution.

General Fielding does not at all exaggerate, in pointing out the extreme importance of State-aided emigration. "Be fruitful and multiply, and replenish the earth," is a precept never more applicable than to England at the present moment. The real difficulty is so to conduct State emigration, on a hitherto unprecedented scale, that it may be something more than a "change of scenery on the stage on which the tragedy of life is to be played to the bitter end." The General's plans have evidently been thought out with care; but it is difficult to avoid the conviction that they would in some respects be difficult to carry out practically.

In a well-considered Paper on the "Young England" of Disraeli's, and that of Lord Randolph Churchill's, time, Mr. Keibel supports the thesis, which we have ever maintained, that the real friends of the poorer classes are not the "Liberals," but the Tories; that "it is of the essence of Toryism to defend the patrimony of the poor, whether spiritual or temporal." He rightly adds, that "the Conservatives now represent the whole body of moderate and prudent men in Her Majesty's dominions." True, but deplorable.

Turning to the literary—but too true a reflex of the social—state of France, Mr. Tilley draws a dismal picture of the French world of letters. To the habitual indelicacy of thought and description which makes a French novel, or the feuilleton of a French newspaper, unfit reading for a modest Englishwoman, single or married, is superadded an insufferable dulness, a nervelessness, to which the history of the much afflicted yet naturally gay, country, affords no recent parallel. It would seem as though some awful catastrophe were needed to induce this highly-gifted nation to retrace its steps on the downward path which it has long been pursuing.

We need not leave the frontiers of France in order to deal with a subject which closely touches at once the interests, and the treaty obligations, of our own country. No sane person doubts that an internecine war between France and Germany cannot long be averted; and Lieut.-Colonel Kotschan has ventured to forecast its main features. Into these we need not enter, further than to observe—what Kotschan discreetly leaves out of sight—that it will all but certainly involve the violation of that Belgium, the neutrality of whose territory we are bound to protect, and, if needful, to enforce. The cloud overhanging us in this quarter is not one of the least black of those which will form the impending thunderstorm.

The paper of Mr. Dennis on Southey, a writer whose works are daily less read, and respecting whom admirers have written ad nauseam, will attract less attention than Mr. Palgrave's deservedly sympathetic article on a poet of far higher originality, William Barnes. Writing, as the reverend poet did, in the comparatively obsolete dialect which prevails throughout the New Forest and Dorsetshire, the full beauty of his poetry is not at first sight perceptible: though it will be at once caught by the ear if intelligently read aloud. The poetry of every nation is, in its inception, "rustic;" but the rustic freshness soon withers under an overgrowth of ornamental foliage, and it must be considered a great gain to meet with it in pristine vigour. This vigour it is that Barnes displays to us. "He presents the image of the true idyllist: no pastoral poetry is more uniformly and delightfully sincere, fresher from homely life, more untouched by literary or initiative infusion." In his own line we agree with the writer in considering him all but unique. "Perhaps," says Mr. Palgrave, "Mozart has the same magical charm, the sweetness, the cry of human pathos, the unremitting and inseparable presence of beauty." Mr. Palgrave's paper should add many to those who enjoy and appreciate poetry known as yet but to comparatively few readers.

PERSIA AND THE PERSIANS.*

It is not surprising that at this, the eleventh hour, attention is being directed to Persia. A nation whose existence is to be reckoned by thousands rather than hundreds of years cannot do otherwise than command respect, if only on the score of antiquity; but, apart from this, admitting that there is much to condemn, there is also much to admire in a country in regard to which not one European in a thousand has the slightest knowledge or information. Thanks, however, to some recent publications this ignorance is no longer justifiable, for there is now every opportunity of learning what hitherto has been confined to the few who could afford time and money to visit the land of Iran.

First and foremost there is Mr. Benjamin's "Persia and the Persians," a volume so charmingly printed and illustrated that it is well nigh an édition de luxe. Nor are the contents less worthy of commendation. Of course the author, having been Minister of the United States, saw chiefly through coloured spectacles, and his experiences were principally, if not solely, in the arena of high life; but even in this direction there is ample opportunity of instruction, and we read with pleasure and withal profit the interesting account of the king and his three sons, of the nobility, some known to fame, others in the comparative obscurity of a non-political life. The account, too, of the palaces, gorgeous in their splendour and bewitching in their luxury, and of the mansions, picturesque yet comfortable, elegant, yet adapted to the requirements alike of climate as of everyday life, cannot fail to enlarge the mind as teaching that each and every nation has its own standard of art, of luxury, and of comfort.

The essay on the Arts of Persia, though bearing the modest prefix of "a glance," gives by far the best account of this interesting and little known subject which it has been our lot to read. Of course there is much room for difference of opinion in regard to the theories propounded, but if all will not agree with the conclusions none can dispute the clearness and force of Mr. Benjamin's arguments. More than this is not to be expected; less would be unfair.

The article on the Passion-Play is chiefly remarkable in that it professes to contain much never before committed to print. Surely Mr. Benjamin has overlooked Sir Lewis Pelly's "Miracle Play of Hasan and Husain," or the extremely complete account of this drama given in Mr. Wollaston's "Half Hours with Muhammad," a work which is replete with information on all that concerns the life and religion of the great lawgiver of Arabia. The chapter on religious sects, on the other hand, which lays no claim to novelty, contains an account of several minor divisions of the Shi'ah faith never before, so far as we are aware, given to the public.

Lastly, the observations on the "Political Situation in Persia" are replete with interest—the reflections of a thoughtful and clear-headed American upon the rôle which Persia will—or, at any rate, might—play in the future should attract attention. England's very existence is bound up with her Eastern possessions. Will not her rulers be wise, and consider? The laissez faire school of politics, always dangerous in the world of rivalry and enterprise, is little less than criminal when the imaginative Oriental is left to "stew in his own juice," and worship the rising sun of activity and zeal.

If Mr. Benjamin in his most fascinating volume deals with high life, Mr. Wills in his less pretentious but no less interesting work, entitled, "Persia as it is," draws aside the veil that enshrouds the homes of the Iranis. Impenetrable as is the domestic life of a Muslim nation, owing in part to the seclusion of women which the faith of Muhammad enjoins, Mr. Wills, being a doctor, was enabled in some measure to dive into the secret recesses of the "andarun"—the harem of Persia—and in a chatty, amusing way he tells us his experiences. His work is a valuable corollary to its larger and more costly companion of "John Murray" fame; read side by side the couple throw a flood of light upon the land of Cyrus and Darius, the kingdom which produced an Alexander the Great and a Nadir Shah, a monarchy old yet not effete, poor yet endowed with a potentiality of wealth which might make it the envy of rivals and the fear of foes, a Power which in the mighty past has played a proud and splendid part, and which in the unknown future may yet live to fan the embers of ancient greatness and prehistoric renown.

THE POEMS OF K. F. RELAIEFF.*

We are always pleased to see a member of the Indian Services devoting his leisure to the acquisition of a language, which bids fair to become so important to all who serve under the Viceroy of India, as does that of Russia. Mr. Davies has undertaken his task under the best auspices. No Russian could be named, whose help a young translator would more gladly hail than that of so accomplished a littérateur as M. Aksakoff, of Moscow.

Nor could the author have chosen a better subject for translation than the poetical works of Relaiëff. Like most educated and intellectual Russians, Relaiëff was deeply penetrated with political discontent. The oppression of the people by venial officials, the corruption of high and low, in a country where Grand Dukes starve the soldiery, by swindling the commissariat, in order to feather their own nests, the absolute tyranny exercised by every military fledgling over worthy and respected citizens who have not donned the uniform of the Tsar, these things are the burden of every book of travels in Russia. And yet "the half hath not been told" unto us. Small wonder that these, and similar, wrongs, vexed the righteous soul of Relaiëff. His political views influenced his career, his poetry is redolent of them, and they brought him to the honourable death of a Russian political martyr. "Accursed country!" were the poet's last words, when the executioner "bungled" in his task of hanging him. "Accursed country, where they know neither how to plot, nor how to judge, nor how to hang" (p. 19). Poor fellow! Of the truth that his countrymen "knew not how to plot," he himself was a sad instance and a lamentable victim.

That his character was one which may well challenge admiration, no one who reads his poetry can doubt; and we can quite believe that "sense of duty was his guiding motive."

The poet's love of his country, and noble indignation against its oppressors, peep out, with but little attempt at concealment, in his first and longest poem, in which Voinarofskyi, the nephew of Mazeppa, tells the tale of his exile from his beloved Ukraine. One can imagine that the poet had himself in view:—

"Full well I know
The step is bold, what may betide
But future fortune can decide:
Success may not attend the blow." (p. 60.)
... Life and death do I despise
And live I must, for all my breast
With patriotism's glow possess
Still, fondly, dreams, that there may be
A time, when joy and liberty,
The heritage our fathers gave,
Our Native land again may bless;
And then some patriot may save
His countrymen from wretchedness.

Again, of his next hero, Vadeem, we are told:—

"His mind was purposed to redeem
By force his countrymen from ills."

Even in the minor gems, resembling what are (too often aptly because so few deserve to be retained in the memory) called fugitive pieces, there is the same longing for something better, until at the end it turns to blank despair.

"For heavy grief and settled gloom
Wandering, till now alone I go,
The world becomes a dreary tomb,
This world of grief and hopeless woe." (p. 130.)

We hope that the few extracts which we have given may but serve to whet the reader's appetite for more, and we can promise him that he will find a perusal of the little book its own reward. Mr. Hart-Davies has rendered the original into easy, flowing English verse; and has shown a commendable partiality for Saxon words. We welcome him as a promising labourer in the all but illimitable field of Russian literature, and hope soon to meet with him again.

THE INDIAN TRIBUTE, AND THE LOSS BY EXCHANGE.*

We need not, on this occasion, follow Macaulay's example in "chaffing" an author on the length of his title-page, the less so because Mr. Pollard's title-page sets forth in a compressed form the conclusions to which his investigations have led him. We can at once see that he is no bimetalist. Indeed, he absolutely rejects, as a measure of value, all relations between the two precious metals. Labour, he tells us (Chap. 3), is "the standard invariable in its own nation, by comparison with which we can ascertain from time to time the fluctuations in the values of the precious metals and of commodities." In this view of the case the author is strictly orthodox; supported as he is by such eminent authorities as Adam Smith and Ricardo. "Labour," says the former, in a pertinent passage, "is the only universal, as well as the only accurate, measure of value, or the only standard by which we can compare the values of different commodities at all times and at all places."

Without disputing so venerable a dictum, and without attempting to introduce our readers to the thorny mazes of the "dismal science," we may go at once to the author's general conclusion. "What we have to account for," he tells us (p. 35), "is the fall in the gold value of the rupee in London from 1860, when the Indian Home charges were only a few hundreds of pounds, to 1s. 7d. in 1884, when the Home charges had risen to seventeen millions." And he thinks that the burden of proof lies on those who deny the connection between the two phenomena. Again (p. 129), "The glut of our (Indian) commodities in the Home market is the result of our growing Home charges." Now, we will not say that the author is mistaking cause for effect; we do not, indeed, think so. But sure we are that he is mistaking, in part at least, coincidence for causation, and that he ascribes to the Home charges a vastly exaggerated influence on the Indian exchange. What proportion do these charges bear to the entire trade between India and England? Surely not such as to reduce the rupee to three-fourths of its normal value.

We dissent from Mr. Pollard's conclusions. But his book is written carefully, if sometimes rather too pugnaciously; and the diagrams with which he illustrates his argument are, like the accompanying tabular statements, very well worthy attention. His argument, if not very close, is fairly clear; and, as a repository of facts on the subject of which it treats, the book is simply invaluable.

"A London Sparrow at the Colinderies" (Sampson Low, Marston and Co.), calls to mind Tate and Brady's

"The birds, more happy far than I,"

for the sparrow (E. V. B.) has seen more of the Colinderies than many people who have devoted not a little time to them. It has uttered some entertaining little chirpings concerning the various objects of interest; and these will pleasantly beguile an otherwise mauvais quart d'heure. It is perhaps not unnatural for a bird to think that "the Baroda Pigeon-House was far and away the best thing in the Exhibition." But it can't, of course, be expected that we should, all of us, agree with birds, merely because we are two-legged like them!

Major G. T. Plunkett's "Walks in Cairo" (Richardson and Co.) divides into what may be called the inside of a week—six "Walks"—the inspection of the endless marvels of the City of Victory. For one unacquainted with Oriental scenes, six weeks are not too many wherein to enjoy Cairo; folks familiar with the immutable East often find themselves "bored" in as many hours. Major Plunkett has hit the juste milieu; and no one visiting, under his guidance, the capital of the Khedive, will fail to behold all that is most especially worth seeing.

BOOKS FOR REVIEW.—"History of the United States," by Percy Greg (W. H. Allen and Co.).

It is stated that Rai Salig Ram, Bahadur, Postmaster-General of the North-West Provinces, will shortly retire.

THE latest news from Afghanistan is not a little surprising. Naib Sarwar Khan, the Governor of Herat, has been secured at Kabul and deprived of his post. He is succeeded by Kazi Siad-Uddin, who has left for Herat. The Kazi will be remembered as having accompanied the Afghan Boundary Commission from the time it entered the Amir's dominions, down to its arrival at Kabul. The change of Governors at Herat at such a period seems inexplicable, and the result of the move will be watched with considerable interest.

THE CAPITAL OF INDIA.

"THERE is no accounting for taste," says the proverb, otherwise it would be difficult to understand why any person not an elector of Kirkaldy should go to hear Sir George Campbell read a paper on one of his favourite hobbies. Sir George is one of that school of philosophers of whom Hudibras wrote:—

"Some force whole regions in despite
O' geography to change their site;
Make former times shake hands with latter,
And that which was before come after."

Sir George has long been dissatisfied with Calcutta as the capital of India, as he has been dissatisfied with most things in this, seemingly to him, worst of all possible worlds. He does not contemplate the blunders committed at and since its creation with the serene satisfaction of the Spanish king of old, who merely gave it as his opinion that things would have been better done had he been consulted, but his temperament partakes more of the irritability of Hamlet when he held it to be "cursed spite" that he should have been born to put the old world straight. At a meeting held at the Westminster Palace Hotel last week, under the auspices of the East India Association, Sir George Campbell read a paper, the subject of which was "The Capital of India." He pointed out that if the capital of India were to be selected no one would propose to put it where Calcutta stands. This might be said of more than half the capital cities of the world, not excluding London itself. There is much virtue in your if. But Sir George has discovered that Calcutta, to all intents and purposes, has already ceased to be the capital of India, and so he treated of that city as briefly as the naturalist did the snakes of Iceland—"there are no snakes in Iceland." Calcutta, which ought never to have been a capital has now practically ceased to be one. So far so good. But there is another place which, having usurped this position, came in for fierce criticism. Sir George took up his parable against Simla.

The real working capital is Simla, where the Government is located the greater part of the year—more than twice as long as in Calcutta, and where its members have their real permanent residences. But Simla itself is unsuited for the purpose. It is most inconveniently situated far in the interior of the hills, and in the whole Himalayan range there is not another so detestable a bit of country as that between the plains and Simla. The water supply is incurably deficient, and drainage is impossible.

If the melodious voice of the lecturer could influence the gods on the eternal hills, Simla would be doomed, and the headquarters of the Government of India be immediately transferred to a site chosen by Sir George Campbell. But in spite of denunciation and bad drainage, Simla is likely to be retained, and its opponents in India know this, and have ceased from troubling themselves further in the matter. Cannot Sir George follow their wise example? He knows that the Supreme Government, with the sanction of successive Secretaries of State for India, has laid out vast sums of money on official buildings at Simla; he knows that a railway will soon traverse that "detestable bit of country" which separates the station from the plains, and that it is possible that a mountain railroad may yet run into Simla itself. Besides this, Sir George knows that in the present aspect of affairs on the North-West frontier of India it would hardly be wise to have the Viceroy located in the Neilgherries, or even at his favourite Nassick. He himself admits that "no existing city or centre supplies all the required conditions of a capital in India." This being so, why, in the name of all that is tantalising, create unprofitable discussions by propounding impossible changes? Cannot the worthy ex-Lieutenant-Governor, so far as the capital of India is concerned, follow Lord Melbourne's advice about another matter—"Leave it alone?"

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

COLONEL RAOUL DE BOURBEL, R.E., on special duty in Kashmir, is retiring from the service.

BRIGADIER-GENERAL PURVIS, commanding at Mooltan, has been transferred to the command of the Presidency District. Colonel Galbraith, succeeds Brigadier-General Purvis in the command of the Mooltan Brigade.

MAJOR FRANCIS THOMAS EDDEN, S.C., has been promoted to be Lieutenant-Colonel on completion of twenty six years' service.

THE 15th Madras Infantry having arrived at Mandalay on the 21st ult., has been placed on the strength of the 1st Brigade.

COLONEL R. W. C. WINSLOE, 2nd Battalion Royal Scots Fusiliers, will be placed on half-pay on the 22nd January, on completing four years' service in command of the Battalion, and proceeds home on the above date.

On the completion of the Cavalry manoeuvres in Sind, a squadron of the 6th Bombay Cavalry will be detained at Sibi, and the troop of the 5th Bombay Cavalry, now quartered at that station, will return with head-quarters to Jacobabad.

THE following officers from Bengal have been detailed for special service in Upper Burma:—Captain G. S. G. Jenkinson, 2nd Battalion Derbyshire Regiment; Lieutenant C. J. Mackenzie, 2nd Battalion Seaforth Highlanders; and Lieutenant A. J. H. Luard, 2nd Battalion Norfolk Regiment.

THE Royal Canadian Regiment is not making such good shooting at Dum-Dum as it has done in former years at other stations, and complaints have been lodged against the quality of ammunition used; but whether the inferior shooting is due to worn-out rifles or to inferior ammunition, which has been repacked and made new in appearance outwardly, is likely to form the subject of inquiry. The rifles, we believe, have been over ten years in use, and are, as a consequence, much worn.

THE last Punjab Gazette contains a notification that the services of Major J. Davidson, Military Secretary to the Punjab Government, are replaced at the disposal of the Government of India. This proceeding is the final step in the transfer of the Punjab Frontier Force from the local Government to the direct jurisdiction of the Commander-in-Chief. The Military Secretary's office, having completed the details of the transfer, is dissolved, and henceforth the connection of the Punjab Government with the Frontier Force and the control which it exercises over that body will be assimilated to the relations between other local Governments and the troops within their territorial limits.

COLONEL BEN WILLIAMS and Mr. G. J. R. Rayment, A.V.D., have returned from the Persian Remount Mission, bringing with them about two hundred and fifty horses, and two hundred and thirty artillery mules. The bulk of the animals were marched through Persia to Bushire—some of the horses covering a thousand miles before they reached the sea—and thence by steamer to Bombay. It is noteworthy that not a single animal brought by the Mission between May and December was lost, and there was no serious accident on or off ship. The horses will be distributed among the "Gulf Batteries," the 8th Hussars, the 7th Dragoon Guards, and the Madras Cavalry regiments.

OWING to the greater wear and tear of horseflesh incurred in the cavalry regiments of the Punjab Frontier Force, from the severer nature of the outpost patrolling duties they have to perform, his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief so far relaxed the rules for "purchase by committee" in their case, as to allow of actual casualties being replaced by commanding officers by purchases made in their own district; provided that district does not come under the operation of the Remount Committee, in which case the concession is only granted for the period the Remount Committee operations are suspended, viz., during the hot weather months. It will, perhaps, be found necessary to sanction a similar relaxation of the rules in the case of Bengal cavalry regiments. Commanding officers are beginning to complain that the new system, however admirable in theory, does not provide them with horses.

THE Government of India have decided to raise four thousand additional Military Police in India for service in Upper Burma. Of this force, one thousand men will be raised from the Punjab, with the recruiting centre at Amritsar; one thousand from the North-West Provinces, with the recruiting centre at Allahabad; and one thousand from Oudh, with the recruiting centre at Lucknow. The remaining thousand will be recruited in the Bombay Presidency. The Native officers and non-commissioned officers will be recruited from the Army as follows:—Per force of 1,000 men, four Native of Rs. 150 each; six Native officers at Rs. 100 each; ten at Rs. 65 each; and a similar number at Rs. 50 each. Then, as to non-commissioned officers, there will be twenty at Rs. 30 each; forty at Rs. 25 each; and forty at Rs. 20 each. The engagement will be for three years, and Native officers and non-commissioned officers, on appointment, will be seconded in their Native regiments for this period. The following British officers have been appointed to the Punjab Police Force:—Captain W. Cook, 3rd Sikhs, to be Commandant, Lieut. R. Dawson, 3rd Sikhs, and Lieut. Anderson, 3rd Punjab Cavalry, to be Assist. Commandants. With regard to the Hindustani force to be raised at Allahabad, Capt. E. E. Taylor, 18th Bengal Infantry, is to be Commandant, and Lieut. J. A. Vanrenen, 9th Bengal Infantry, and Lieut. J. A. H. Woodward, 38th Bengal Infantry, are to be Assistant Commandants. The appointments as yet made to the Oudh force, to be raised at Lucknow, are Lieut. W. Giles, 21st Punjab Infantry, and Lieut. H. B. Borradaile, 32nd Pioneers, Assistant Commandants. Commandants will receive a Staff allowance of Rs. 300, to be raised to Rs. 400 on passing in Burmese. They will be seconded for five years in their regiments. The Assistant Commandants will receive a Staff allowance of Rs. 200, rising to Rs. 250 on passing in Burmese. They will be seconded in their regiments for two years.

It is expected that military operations in Burma will be practically ended by February. Sir Frederick Roberts, as our telegrams announced, leaves Rangoon for Calcutta on the 6th prox., making over the command to Sir Charles Arbuthnot. Meantime the Commander-in-Chief has a good deal to get through during his last few weeks in Burma. After returning from the ruby mines he will probably make but a very short stay at Mandalay, and then start southwards, going by steamer to Myingyan, and thence marching across country to Hinedet. Here a short halt may be made to learn how the expedition to the Shan States is progressing, and then Sir Frederick Roberts will move southwards again through Yemethen and Nyingyan to Tounghoo to judge for himself of the military requirements of the country which General Lockhart has been pacifying. On return to India he will leave before the end of February for the other extreme of the Empire, as arranged before the Burma question came into consideration. There are several questions in regard to the defences of the Peshin frontier still awaiting decision.

ANOTHER CATECHISM.

The Lahore paper is responsible for the statement that the following questions have been addressed by members of the general public to the members of the Public Service Commission on the conclusion of their stay in Lahore:—

PERSONAL AND PARTICULAR.

1. Have you individually or collectively any notion what you are going to do? If so, how many, and why?
2. Admitting for a moment that you would condescend to such frivolities, are you prepared to lay odds against your not falling out among yourselves within the next six weeks? If so, how long does your book stand open, and what are your terms?
3. On the hypothesis that none of you had any preconceived opinions when the Commission began, what was the dominant impression in your several minds (a) as the duffri dealt round the blotting-pads and paper slips; (b) as the President cleared his throat for the opening speech; and (c) as you saw the look in the eye of the first Native witness.
4. How many of you cherish the delusion that you are going to "make your mark" on this Commission, and in pursuance of this intention how far will you make yourselves nuisances to the rest of the Commission?
5. How long will your performance go on for; and what are the prices of admission?
6. On the hypothesis that any sane person would reply at length to your one hundred and eighty-four questions, what do you think would be his mental condition by the time he had finished? Would it approximate to yours? If so, in what respects?
7. Presupposing that it is a cold morning, and all the windows have been left open overnight, do you consider it (a) expedient, (b) dignified, or (c) imperatively necessary to fight for places nearest the one fire in the Lawrence Hall?
8. When you hear the light-hearted subaltern putting on his pumps in the dressing-room, next door for an afternoon dance, are you filled (a) with envy or (b) with contempt?
9. How do you and the Fancy Ball Committee arrange matters generally; and particularly in regard to the Fancy Ball Supper?
10. On the supposition that you do diligently sit still daily from 10.30 A.M. till 5.20 P.M., do you not hold that the Provincial Government might supply cushions, at P.W.D. rates, for your chairs?

GENERAL AND ADMINISTRATIVE.

12. State briefly, with examples, the shortest way of discovering whether a witness has been "crammed" with answers to your questions. How may the cramming be eliminated in the process of cross-examination; and what resemblance does the witness, after such elimination, bear to a piece of chewed string?

13. At a most moderate estimate, how many times has the word "domiciled" and "domiciliary," with all its derivatives, been used at your seferunt, and by whom?

14. On the hypothesis that you eventually submit a report (a) three times larger than that of the Education Commission; (b) twice as big as the Famine Report, when do you suppose that your recommendations will be acted on?

15. Allowing that you allow that (a) a pleader, (b) an editor of a vernacular newspaper, (c) the president of any Anjuman or Sabha, collectively represent the opinion of the Indian public, with a capital P for a radius of thirty miles from such place or places as (1) the pleader may plead, (2) the editor may edit, (3) the president may preside, don't you find their evidence extremely valuable and disinterested?

16. On the hypothesis that you are elementarily acquainted with Shakespeare, in what points is your present position analogous to that of the cook who smote the eels on the head and cried:—"Down, wantons, down?"

17. Basing your inference on a general knowledge of the amusements of the lighter hours of an educated Native of twenty in England, have you any grounds for supposing (a) that the ennobling influence of the Pavilion, (b) the chastened atmosphere of the Café Monaco, (c) or the pure morality of Romano's, between 11 P.M. and 2 A.M. distributed over four-and-twenty months would be blest either to (a) a Native civilian, (b) or the villages in his district on his return to India?

18. If open competitive examination were held in India for the Covenanted posts reserved for Natives, have you any notion how a successful candidate would behave (a) as District Judge with a Mohurum Riot in the head town of his charge, (b) as Assistant Commissioner with a cholera outbreak in an outlying tehsil, (c) as Deputy Commissioner pending an attempted dacoity on the Treasury, (d) the same official on hearing news of a lathi scuffle three miles away?

19. Depict broadly on paper the delight of a Katoch Rajput of the Jalandhar district on being invested in open Durdar with the Companionship of the Indian Empire by a Deputy Commissioner, the son of a Nai who had shaved Englishmen.

20. Touch lightly on the sentiments of a high caste Bunia convicted of fraud and conspiracy to extort by an Assistant Commissioner, son of a Mirasi—by choice a Vaggal—and graduate of two universities.

21. In view of the present season of the year, state how far peace and goodwill among men would be promoted were a disorderly Pathan sepy at Multan summarily tried and punished by a Rora Khatri Magistrate, whose grandfather had been kidnapped on the Hazara frontier by the grandfather of the said sepy?

EAST INDIA ASSOCIATION.

The Council of the East India Association—a body free from political bias, and including members of various shades of opinion—have just addressed a letter to every member of both Houses of Parliament requesting consideration of the fact that India possesses no representative assembly of its own, and that, consequently, the duty of supervising and controlling the administration of its affairs devolves in a special degree upon the British Houses of Legislature. It is believed that at the present time there is a general desire that the aspirations and wants of India should be carefully considered, and that, as far as practicable, every reasonable cause for dissatisfaction should be removed, so as to secure the contentment and prosperity of its people, and thus deepen and strengthen their loyalty and attachment to British rule. The Council, therefore, desire respectfully to invite special attention to the following matters, which they believe to have an important bearing on the future welfare of India: 1. The due protection of the existing frontier, including the early completion of the strategic railway system, a measure called for not only on grounds of public safety and tranquillity, but also as leading to eventual reduction of military expenditure. 2. The improvement of the condition of the rural population by—(a) the simplification and development of the existing system of Government advances for construction of works of irrigation, drainage, and other agricultural purposes; (b) the prompt remission or suspension of revenue demand when required by calamity of season; (c) modifying the law of debtor and creditor in the manner recommended by the Finance Commission, and protecting Native homesteads from sale in execution of decrees; (d) reforming the system of Land Revenue Assessment in estates not permanently settled, by so improving the village records that the present harassing inquiry into assets and revision of the register of holdings in connection with re-settlements shall be unnecessary; (e) granting, in the case of well-developed estates protected from vicissitude of season, a permanent assessment on a sliding scale varying according to the price of staple articles of produce—the money value of such produce being calculated from time to time (as in the tithe assessment) at average market rates; (f) encouraging and judiciously assisting migration from over-populated to under-populated tracts. 3. The encouragement of Native trades and manufactures by—(a) a strict enforcement of the Government of India's Resolution of January, 1883, requiring that, in the purchase of Government stores, articles of Indian produce and manufactures shall ceteris paribus have preference; (b) the removal of obstacles to the free development of Native arts and industries; for instance, by the abolition, as already advocated, of the heavy duty now levied in England on Indian silver work, and by the amendment of the hall-marking regulations which, in their present form, operate protectively in favour of the English producer. 4. The introduction and stimulation of new manufactures and products by Government experiments, and other suitable measures, in the manner successfully adopted in the case of indigo, tea, and cinchona. 5. The energetic prosecution of works of public utility, including in addition to roads, railways, canals, and drainage, the improvement of harbours and providing a pure and sufficient water supply for towns. 6. The extension and improvement of town and village primary schools for both sexes, and the establishment of schools for technical education. 7. Increasing the number and efficiency of Small Debt Courts, and reducing the cost of processes. 8. The judicious development of the system of Local Self-Government. 9. The larger employment in the public services of the inhabitants of India, irrespective of race or creed: (a) By arranging, in respect to superior appointments in all civil departments of the service, that the examination for such appointments now held in England be henceforth held simultaneously in England and in India, the selected candidates from India being required to proceed to England and undergo the training and examinations now proscribed; (b) by introducing, in respect to all subordinate civil services for which educational training is required, the principle of competitive examinations, with such safeguards as may be deemed applicable to the particular circumstances of each province. 10. The constitution of the Indian Legislative Councils on a wider basis, by the gradual admission of elected members. 11. The reform of the Council of the Secretary of State for India, by the reduction of the term of office of members from ten to five years (a second term being allowable under special circumstances), by the appointment of a member having practical acquaintance with Indian agriculture, and by providing that one at least of the members shall be a Native of India. 12. The exercise of a watchful supervision over the Home charges of the Secretary of State for India in Council, including the adjustment of military accounts between the British and the Indian Exchequers. The Council urgently support an early and exhaustive inquiry into the affairs of India, suitable measures being adopted for obtaining the evidence of representatives of all classes of our Indian subjects; and, meanwhile, they express their satisfaction that steps have been taken for inquiring into the subject of the fall in the value of silver in relation to gold.

FOOD PRODUCTS.

EXTRACTS.

THE COMPANY'S EXTRACTS are manufactured on a new principle, which yields products of the very best quality.

"Normal" Food Extract is superior to most, if not all, other Meat Extracts, owing to its richness in stimulating and restorative properties. It contains, as shown by analysis, less ash and water, and more substances soluble in alcohol, and more nitrogenous compounds than the best known Extracts.

It imparts an agreeable flavour to Soups, Sauces, Stews, Gravies, Meat-Jellies, &c., while its stimulating properties are analogous to those of Meat Extract, making it a valuable addition to all diets and all but indispensable to Vegetarians.

The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" has acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other Service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent course of its staff of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A series of Illustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" freely opens its correspondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for interchange of opinion is afforded, such as is offered by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supplements."

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" circulates largely throughout India and the Colonies. It is supplied direct to the Army and Marine bureaux of the French, Russian, and other Governments, and it is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Services, especially of the German, French, and American Armies, who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.

OPINIONS.

The Calcutta Review for October reached us a day or two ago, and a glance at its contents shows that the number more than sustains the reputation which this old and favourite publication is again achieving. The Review is rapidly regaining the position which it . . .
there is no fear of the Indian Review, or the Asiatic Quarterly rivaling it in public favour.—Statesman,
October, 1886.

The best service which I ever rendered in India,
or, indeed, for India, was the establishment, single-handed, of the Calcutta Review, which has done far more for Indian literature than anything I have written under my own name.—J. W. KAYE, Athenæum Club, June 23, 1872.

The Calcutta Review has given us valuable articles on the army. Some from the pen of Sir Henry Lawrence, who wrote with the spirit of prophecy, of the coming storm of which he was one of the noblest victims.—
Address of the C.-in-C. at the U.S. Inst. of India.

. . . The Calcutta Review has not only throughout its career reflected the highest honour on its public-spirited promoters and its well-known distinguished contributors, but has done much to help forward the reconstruction of our system of governing India.—Westminster

LONDON: Messrs. B. ANDERSON & CO., 14, Cockspur Street, Charing Cross, S.W.THE "VOICE OF INDIA."A MAGAZINE THAT GIVES EXPRESSION TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF THE PEOPLE OF
INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing MONTHLY (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth;
but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

General Intelligence.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 21st January; from Allahabad and Madras to the 19th January; and from Calcutta to the 18th January.

THE Government of Bombay have issued a resolution, suggesting that a sum of Rs. 80,000, voted by the Municipal Corporation for a Jubilee Memorial, should be assigned to a Victoria Technical Institute. Government is prepared to make a grant of Rs. 25,000 annually, and the Governor to lend the greater part of Government House at Parel in order that an immediate beginning might be made.

THE Public Service Commission has been sitting at the Secretariat, Bombay, during the past week. A large number of witnesses have been examined.

THE relief of troops from Upper Burma will begin as soon after the 1st March as possible. All the Cavalry will return, except the Madras Lancers; and the whole of General Prendergast's original force, together with some of the regiments sent early last year, will be brought back.

ALL the Cavalry, except the Madras Lancers, return from Burma to India in March next, and also the whole of the force which originally formed General Prendergast's army of occupation.

It is understood that no action will be taken in the matter of the disposal of the Ruby Mines until the Government is in possession of the report of Mr. Carter, the civil officer with the expedition.

THE Government of India, it is understood, will accept the recommendations of the Finance Committee in regard to the Provincial contracts, thus saving fifty lakhs of rupees.

THE Finance Committee is reported to have recommended a very considerable retrenchment in connection with the Ecclesiastical Department.

ONE of the recommendations made by the Finance Committee in connection with their scheme for the revision of the Madras High Court establishments is the appointment of an official Receiver.

THE Government of India has declined to alter the terms as to the repayment of the Bombay Port Trust Loan.

It is understood to be the intention not to have any gathering of Native Chiefs in Calcutta for the Jubilee celebration, as they will celebrate the occasion by durbars and ceremonies in their own territories.

A RUMOUR seems to have gained currency in certain quarters that the Government intend to grant to all officers one year of service in the time reckoning for pension in commemoration of the Jubilee of the Queen's reign.

HIS Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab, now on tour with the Public Services Commission, returns to Lahore at the beginning of next month, and will stay till after the celebration of Her Majesty's Jubilee.

NEWS has reached Calcutta of another rising on the part of the Ghilzais, who have successfully attacked the Ameer's troops near Mukkur. Trouble is believed to be brewing in various quarters.

ACCORDING to reports from Darjeeling our trade with Thibet has been completely extinguished, not a single merchant, pony or package having come in from that country, while in former years Darjeeling used to be full of Thibetan traders in December and January. Hundreds of traders, however, are said to be collected on the Thibetan side of the passes, which are closely guarded by Thibetan soldiers, who prevent anyone from passing either up or down, and are proof against bribery.

ONE of the oldest lady residents of Mussoorie died a few days ago, leaving a large sum of money. The greater part of it goes as a legacy to the Lord Bishop of Calcutta to build a church with.

THE Government of Bengal has placed on record that it is desirable that something should be done for the indigenous Sanskrit schools of the province, but that owing to financial pressure it can do nothing at present.

THE Maharaja of Cashmere is making great preparations for the celebration of the Queen's Jubilee. A fitting permanent memorial of the occasion will be afforded in the shape of a handsome and substantial bridge across the Tawi at Jummoo, an undertaking that will cost several lakhs.

SIR ROGER LETHBRIDGE has been so much indisposed that he is compelled to break off his Indian trip and return to England forthwith.

A TREASURY order fixes the Government rate for the rupee in transactions between the Indian and Home Government at one shilling and sixpence for the ensuing financial year. There has been a gradual fall of twopence since 1882-83.

It is announced that Mr. J. B. Lyall has been appointed Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab.

Two new steamboats for the Indian Marine, namely, the Muzbee and the Tamil, have arrived in Bombay from England. They are intended for torpedo and submarine mining operations.

Notes of the Week.

THE news from India continues to be of the same pleasant nature which we recorded last week. Preparations are being made everywhere for the celebration of the Queen's Jubilee.

FIREWORKS, of course, abound. To the Oriental mind the display of fireworks is the grandest of all ideas—although the display has really been played out so far as the Occidental mind is concerned. Fireworks were exhibited all through India when the Duke of Edinburgh went there; they were again shown when the Prince of Wales made his tour through the country; until at last one Press correspondent wrote that he hoped "never to see fireworks again on this side of the grave."

THE news of the death of Mr. Moore has been the comment of much remark in several circles, political and private. No abler man could have filled the position to which he had been appointed, and the difficulty of finding a successor to him is no slight one. There are many outside applicants for the vacancy, but it is probable that the Secretary of State for India will find within the India Office someone capable of undertaking the duties and responsibilities of the position.

THE Bengalis in India are, of course, annoyed that the Mahomedans refuse to join with them in denouncing British rule in the East. A Mahomedan paper, written in the Vernacular, says: "Things should be recognised as they are. The Mahomedans are convinced that Radicalism will not do in India yet; that India must be ruled by an impartial, just despotism, and that English rule is based on the firm rock of equal justice."

THE news from Burma is satisfactory. Sir Frederick Roberts has returned by this time to his command in India; but the trouble on the North-West Frontier has yet to be settled. Why cannot England demand an open explanation from Russia regarding the question of an advance towards India? The delimitation business seems to be a farce on paper or in fact.

THE death of Sir Charles Macgregor is a calamity in many ways. He was an able, clever, and distinguished soldier, and there is nothing to detract from the obituary notice given by the Times, to-day, which we have reprinted in our columns. But Sir Charles was a Russophobist of the strongest character. He had always the idea that Russia would make an immediate advance on India the moment that such a chance offered, and these views he did not hesitate to communicate to the Press of India. The Times writes mysteriously about the secrecy in which Sir Charles Macgregor's opinions regarding Russian advance towards India is held in the official archives; but this is all nonsense. Sir Charles had strong, if sometimes strange, opinions upon this subject, but he never hesitated about expressing them openly and without reserve.

THE news that Upper Burma is in such a condition that Sir Frederick Roberts can leave immediately to return to his legitimate work in India is satisfactory enough, but other news is to the effect that matters in Upper Burma are not altogether so satisfactory as the General and his friends would wish. It is all very good to ask for Volunteers from the Punjab regiments now in Burma, and to offer those who volunteer for police duties extra pay and promotion, but the question is, Will those who are supposed to benefit by the arrangement accept the terms? The Punjabis certainly will not.

THE Finance Committee has, it is stated, recommended a very considerable retrenchment in connection with the Ecclesiastical Department. The total grant is £28,000 a year, and this sum the Church of England shares with the Church of Scotland and the Church of Rome, the last-named receiving no less than £68,000 as its portion.

On the last day of the old year Oodeypore was the scene of a ceremony, unique, perhaps, of its kind and very encouraging for the future good relations of the conflicting nationalities of India. A Mission Hospital was being opened, and there were present dignitaries of all races and creeds—Anglican, Presbyterian, Catholic, Mahomedan, and Hindu—and the function was as varied as the audience. All—from his Highness the Maharana downwards—rose while an extempore prayer, concluding with the Lord's Prayer, was offered in Hindustani, by a Presbyterian clergyman; then an address was read by the Dewan in Hindustani; after this a speech in Hindustani, then another in English, both received with cheers or colourable imitation thereof; then the poet laureate of Oodeypore read some Hindi verses, and finally the distinguished guests were shown over the building. When Rajput pride and religious and sectarian differences can thus all be sunk in a medley of Presbyterian prayer, speeches, cheers, and Hindi poetry to open a Mission Hospital, hope of the millennium remains to India.

THE principal petroleum wells in Burma are situated about three miles in and from Yennan-Young, a port north of Minhla; they are very ancient, and from two to three hundred feet in depth. The cleansing of these wells is a laborious and dangerous feat, the Natives who descend for the purpose being often, owing to the mephitic vapour, brought up in a fainting condition. The oil collects during the night, to a depth of two or three feet, and is scooped up in a primitive fashion, in country chatties. The company are, however, getting plant and machinery out from Europe to work them on a more scientific principle than hitherto, though it is doubtful whether the oil, when refined, can be sold at a price to oust the American petroleum from the markets of India. The country round is barren in the extreme, with low hills of scrub jungle and the remains of extinct volcanoes. It is intensely hot for nine months of the year.

INDIA.

CALCUTTA, FEB. 6.

Preparations for the Queen's Jubilee are proceeding rapidly in all parts of India. Here in Calcutta outward and visible signs of the approaching festivities are already evident. Every public building is covered with a bamboo framework to be used for the purpose of illumination. The Government will, it is said, spend nearly a lakh of rupees on the illumination of its offices, and as the tradesmen and private residents will not be behindhand the city will present a magnificent spectacle on the night of the 16th inst. The official programme is not yet published, but it is believed that the rejoicings will commence with a special thanksgiving service in the Cathedral, the Viceroy being present. Later in the day the Viceroy will receive in a pavilion on the racecourse deputations from the public bodies and from the different classes and communities, who will present loyal addresses, which are to be forwarded to the Queen. There are to be fireworks and illuminations on the same evening, and probably a State ball will be given at Government-house on the following night. Races, balls, a treat to 30,000 school children, and various other minor rejoicings, will fill the remainder of the week.

The citizens of Bombay propose to proclaim the Jubilee publicly in front of the Town Hall, after a full choral service in the Cathedral, to be attended by the Governor and all the high officials. The provincial towns and districts are also busily preparing for the occasion, and many of them, not content with the passing pleasures of fireworks, are raising money for permanent memorials, such as public halls, public parks, hospitals, waterworks, &c. A novel suggestion has been made, which, if it could be carried out, would have a very striking effect—that, namely, of lighting huge bonfires on every hilltop in the Deccan. The Konkan, an Anglo-Indian newspaper, improves on this suggestion by proposing that the line of fires should be carried on from the Deccan through Rajpootana to the Delhi ridge, thus circling Western India with a ring of fire and carrying home the celebration of the Jubilee to the inhabitants of the remotest corners of the Empire. But the preparations for such a spectacle would take time, and could hardly be commenced now.

The Supreme Government has published a resolution on the subject of the proposed revision of its financial contracts with the provincial Governments, the working of which shows plainly that the provincial Governments are not disposed to accept without complaints the reductions recommended by the Finance Committee. The Viceroy in Council accordingly points out that the Supreme Government being responsible for the military defence of the Empire and other matters of Imperial importance, may be compelled to leave to a provincial Government at the commencement of a new contract, a smaller amount of the increase which has accrued in its revenues during the expiring term than might otherwise have been assigned to it. The provincial Governments are informed that although they cannot claim the disposal of the increment earned by their own economical management, they ought not on that account to be less careful to economise. To the complaint that little freedom has been gained by the so-called decentralisation, the Supreme Government replies that it cannot concede to the provincial Governments greater powers than it possesses itself. It cannot itself initiate measures of importance without reference to the India Office, and absolute administrative independence is by no means an object of the provincial system. The resolution goes on to say that the question whether greater freedom of initiative might not be given to the Indian Government is one which calls for discussion and ventilation, but it would be more fittingly discussed by a Royal Commission than in a Government resolution.

Mehdi Hassan Khan, Chief Justice of Hyderabad, has published a remarkable letter on the subject of the refusal of representative Mahomedans to take part in the recent Native congress at Calcutta, and of the criticisms which that refusal elicited on the part of the Hindoo agitators. The critics, he says, might have assumed that the leaders of an influential community like the Indian Mahomedans had other reasons than selfishness and sycophancy. If they had inquired before condemning they would have found certain convictions rooted in the Mahomedans which are entirely out of harmony with so premature and extravagant a claim as that put forward by the congress to suddenly raise a country ill-prepared like India to the full stature of a self-governing nation—they would have found a general desire to recognise the dispositions of the British Government as honest. The Mahomedans felt bound to recognize that past misrule and anarchy had reduced the capacity of the people of India for self-government. He could point, he goes on to say, to the Native States, the higher appointments of which are in the hands of picked Natives, trained in the British service; and yet every well-informed man knew that those States owed their tranquillity and such good government as they could claim to the fact that an English Resident was watching and advising them at every step. He adds:—

"Things should be recognized as they are. The Mahomedans are convinced that Radicalism will not do in India yet; that India must be ruled by an impartial, just despotism; and that the only thing required is that English rule should always be based on the firm rock of equal justice."

The Duke and Duchess of Connaught have been making a tour in Kattywar, and were entertained at a banquet by the Kattywar chiefs at Rajkote on Monday. The Duke, replying to the toast of "The Queen's health," expressed his pleasure in making the acquaintance of the chiefs, and remarked that a practical proof had been given of their loyalty and devotion by the raising of subscriptions for Jubilee memorials.

The frontier tribe of Bonerwals, which gave trouble some months ago, now shows signs of accepting the terms offered by the Punjab Government. A deputation has arrived in Mardan for the purpose of discussing those terms with the Peshawar officials. The blockade which has been in force against the tribe apparently has had its effect at last.

BURMA.

RANGOON, Feb. 6.

General Roberts and his staff left for Calcutta this morning. I had a lengthened conversation with him yesterday on the position of affairs in Upper Burma.

Although much and durable good work has been accomplished during the last few months, the Commander-in-Chief does not claim to have made a final and definite settlement of the country. No matter how complete and well-disposed the garrison retained in Upper Burma may be, no matter how well the police force may be organised, occasional outbreaks are, he says, certain to occur during the present year. Our smaller posts will be attacked in some districts, and villages will be looted and burnt.

General Roberts has, however, dealt a fatal blow to the insurgents in Upper Burma. All the larger bands have been completely broken up, and their leaders are fugitives, ceaselessly pursued. The rebel and dacoits have received such a severe lesson that they are disheartened, and are surrendering in large numbers. The work of disarmament has been largely carried out. Besides a vast quantity of other weapons, over 3,000 rifles and muskets have been already taken or surrendered.

The General fully believes that if the construction of roads in Upper Burma be continued, and an efficient police force be established, the province will rapidly become as quiet as, if not quieter than, Lower Burma, which, to quote General Roberts's own expression, "has never been properly wheeled into line," because the police force there has never been properly drilled, disciplined, and organised. General Roberts has taken up the question of police organisation with great vigour, and made strong representations on the subject to the Government of India. The Commander-in-Chief is convinced after full consideration that the Burmese may, under able officers and with proper organisation, be turned into an efficient force for the maintenance of peace and order. During his stay in Upper Burma he introduced a military organisation among the police there. This step was found necessary both in the Punjab and Oude on the first occupation of them, and it seemed to General Roberts doubly necessary in Burma, where the people are greatly wanting in respect for discipline and in obedience. He has been very favourably impressed by the progress made in discipline and efficiency by the Burmese police in Upper Burma during the past few months, and since their discipline and organisation have been vigorously taken in hand. He expressed regret at the desponding tone adopted by the civil officers with reference to the capacity of the Burmese to be turned into an efficient police force.

He said that the future of Burma mainly depended on the police force. A large portion of the country could only be permanently held by a Burmese police force. The recent Punjabee police levies, although good fighting men, were merely soldiers under another name and useless for ordinary police duties. Unless an efficient Burmese police force could be organised the permanent pacification of Burma was far distant. To obtain this result in Burma a thorough reform of the present force was required. General Roberts will meet Mr. Crosthwaite, the new Chief Commissioner, in Calcutta, and confer with him on the question.

The most important services rendered by General Roberts have been those outside military operations. The alliance which he has effected between the Government and the Buddhist priesthood is of great importance. The kindlier feelings that he has caused to spring up between our troops and the Burmese people, by his precepts and example, will undoubtedly bear good fruit, and facilitate the work of final pacification. The Buddhist archbishop, who arrived in Rangoon yesterday, continues to show himself most anxious to assist us. He had a very satisfactory and friendly interview with General Roberts yesterday at the great Shoay Dagon Pagoda.

It is only since General Roberts assumed the command in Burma that the conciliatory and statesmanlike policy which from the first has been advocated by the Viceroy has received a fair trial. It must be especially gratifying to Lord Dufferin to find that his action in sending General Roberts to Burma has been thoroughly successful, and that this success has been so largely due to his (the Viceroy's) policy having been thereby fully carried out.

The mortality among the European troops in Burma will probably be considerably lessened this year. They are better lodged, but the Commander-in-Chief has ordered that, except in cases of special emergency, they are only to be employed as mounted infantry during the hot weather. The mounted infantry in Upper Burma has been raised to a strength of 1,800 men.

General Roberts expressed much satisfaction with the manner in which the Commissariat department had been managed by Colonel Laughton. He had not heard of a single breakdown, even in circumstances of unusual emergency. He also referred to the efficient manner in which the medical service had been directed and the field hospitals organised by Deputy-Surgeon-General Farrel. The General said that the manner in which the Irrawaddy Flotilla Company had carried out the transport arrangement had been very satisfactory indeed, and without their assistance it would have been impossible to carry on the campaign.

He remarked that a special feature of the recent operations had been the opportunities afforded to junior officers of showing their capacity, and the result had been most satisfactory. General Roberts wished to remain three weeks longer in Burma, but the Government of India refused its consent. Had he remained he felt confident that Hla-Oo, and probably Boshway, would have surrendered to him within the period named. This opinion is generally shared here, in view of the great ascendancy which General Roberts has succeeded in obtaining over the Burmese from the confidence that he has inspired.

General Arbuthnot will return to Madras about the end of March, or when the reliefs have left for India.

ANGLO-INDIAN PRESS.

RAILWAY COMMUNICATION WITH INDIA.

(Times of India.)

Sir William Andrew has reprinted from the Times his letter on the "Advance of Russia," and this, along with additions, he sends us in a pamphlet. Sir William cannot but feel proud that the extension of railway communication between Europe and Asia has gone on, as he has advocated for nearly thirty years, yet he must also feel somewhat aggrieved that this extension has not been along the line he advocated, and still more that Russia has taken the place which he hoped would be taken by Russia. The Euphrates Valley Railway, sketched out and surveyed by General Chesney, was warmly supported by Sir William Andrew, in season and out of season, but nothing came of the project. There were many reasons for this, chief among these being the expense and risk of the undertaking. The route by Brindisi and P. and O. steamer is so rapid and comfortable, compared with the old journey round the Cape, that the advantages of a railway, although they might be admitted in theory, could never so clearly present themselves to the practical world of financiers and the travellers between Europe and India, as to issue in a feasible scheme. And then there was always the military difficulty that, as the railway would run through Turkey and Persia, it could not be properly defended by the British for their sole use during war in the East (during which time alone it would be of primary importance) and the further continual menace it was subjected to in the existence of the Russian power in the Caucasus and the Caspian. But Russia holds a secure base, and is, in fact, protected from external foes along the whole length of the new line. The railway has been constructed from a base on the Caspian Sea, and it runs along the Akhal and Merv Oases to the river Oxus, from whence it will be carried before long to the Siberian base at Samarkand and Tashkend, and thus onward, forming a loop in Russian territory. And when the time comes, it will be carried from Merv towards Herat, this extension being a necessary consequence of the railways already constructed. And it may also be taken as pretty certain that the Russian railway in Trans-Caucasia will be extended to Teheran. The project is an old one, and only waits funds and the Imperial order that it may be commenced. For the moment, Russia is too busy with the affairs of Bulgaria, and the new complications that have risen in Europe to spare time and attention to the prosecution of her schemes of aggrandisement in Persia. Though it is quite possible that a feint will be made in Central Asia towards the Indian frontier, this would depend on the extent to which England is drawn into the political whirlpool of Eastern complications. But, on the assumption that Russia has gained her point in Europe and has strengthened her position for a final spring at the Bosphorus, the time for the Persian question to be started would arrive.

The Russian Ambassador has for long exercised a powerful influence at the Court of the Shah, for the commanding position of Russia in marching with the frontier of Persia, and in possessing the sole right of sailing the Caspian, could not fail to ensure this. Such considerations clearly show that the British Government wisely refused to carry out the Euphrates Valley Railway scheme, for it would not have been as useful as the Suez Canal, and would have entailed as great a burden of responsibility and anxiety, and might have led to war. Apart from its utility as a means of communicating between Europe and India, the scheme would possess considerable political significance, and it would mean the adoption of a new policy forming an extension to that which gained Cyprus for England. It would mean that Great Britain intended to protect the railway that was to be made; and with the many and increasing liabilities of the Empire it would be a matter for very grave consideration before such a policy was finally adopted. Sir William Andrew quotes in his letter the declaration made by Lord Salisbury in the House of Lords in 1885 that the Government considered the subject of connecting the Mediterranean and the Indian Ocean one of the most important questions of the day, and a matter for which Government would be held largely responsible by the public if "they did not adopt at an early period a definite policy on the question." Sir William Andrew puts in an appendix to his pamphlet a letter from Dr. Springer, who has been investigating the financial history and condition of Babylonia. Dr. Springer has formed some theories as to the fertility of Babylonia, and asserts that "by restoring the canals, most of which were still kept in repair a thousand years ago, 48½ million acres of land, returning a gross revenue of one hundred million pounds annually, might be recovered." In these days of strict economy a matter of "a hundred million pounds annually" is not at all to be despised, and Dr. Springer's invitation to his friend "Colonel Nassau Lees, or any other Arabic scholar," to follow his inquiries "with a view of verifying the correctness of the results arrived at," will no doubt be thankfully accepted. Dr. Springer's explanation, however, that his statements are "founded upon official records of the revenue which the alluvium yielded to the State in the seventh to tenth centuries of our era," will tend to diminish the ardour of the pursuit of the "hundred million pounds annually."

The other scheme for a railway between Europe and India is that which was brought before the London Chamber of Commerce on the 15th December, and which is referred to above, namely, the line from the Caspian to Merv and Herat. It is a matter which requires no investigation into the historical records of the seventh or tenth centuries, but it is a matter of vital significance to the north-western frontier of India. It is a distance of 3,165 miles from London to Quetta. Railway communication already exists over about 2,600 miles of this distance. There is a break of about 120 miles from there to Herat, and 440 miles from Herat to the Indian frontier. There is a further break of about 200 miles from Vladikavkaz to Petrofsk, but this is of small consequence, because there is an alternative route between Batoum and Baku, and, besides, the Petrofsk railway is sanctioned and will soon be made. If the Russian Government are allowed to bring their railway to Herat, which they are most anxious to be allowed to do, and if the Afghan Government sanctions, and the British and Indian Governments construct a railway over the other 440 miles from the frontier post of Chuman, then would the communication be complete. As to the feasibility of the scheme there cannot be a doubt. And as to its being self-supporting there can be little doubt. But as to the military significance and value of such a railway considered with reference to the rivalry between Russia and England, there will be many doubts and fears expressed. Colonel Stewart proposes that, in the event of the railway being made, the sending of a lightning express like that between Paris and Varna, by which the journey between London and India would be performed in seven or eight days. Of course, this route would not be open to any great extent to the journeying to and from of soldiers, but the fact that railways are extending in Central Asia, and that the Russians will assuredly take their railway to Herat or its neighbourhood even if England does not attempt the continuation of the line, will force on for a further consideration the scheme for joining the Mediterranean and the Indian Ocean on which Lord Salisbury promised a definite policy.

THE PLAINT OF THE JUNIOR CIVILIAN.

(Civil and Military Gazette.)

"A handful of juniors just fresh out from home."

—Vide Pioneer's definition of a "Junior Civilian."

I have worked for ten seasons or more,
In Settlement, District or Court;
I have served, like the rest of my corps,
All over the Province in short.
From Ismail accursed to the Bar,
From Jhung to Peshawar I roam,
And back from Kohat to Hissar;

But—

The Pi says I'm "fresh out from Home."

I have loved, I have lost, twice or thrice:
My weeds are "long Dawsons with straw;"
I can sit fourteen-one of shod Vice,
And badger a pleader at law.
I can quote with precision the bulk
Of Currie's delectable tone.

I can coax a Hill Chief from a sulk;

And—

I find I am "fresh out from Home."

I can flirt with the girls at the well

In dialect rude and uncouth;

I can force a fat Khattri to tell,

By accident, half of the truth.

I can chew like a Rajah, my pân—

I can slang with a Naggal or Dôm,

I can say:—"Têrâ mûsha Pathan!"

Yet—

The Pi says I'm "fresh out from Home."

That home I have quitted an age,

[Ten Junes in the District seem long]

For I sailed when "Our Boys" was the rage,

And "Tommy make room" was the song.

There's a patch on the top of my pate

That needs not the care of the comb,

And thirteen eleven's my weight;

Though—

They tell me I'm "fresh out from Home."

I have worn my first saddle and second

Clean down to the wood of the tree;

And D. C.'s a dozen I reckoned

Have managed my transfers and me;

I am learned in roadways and cess—

In rabi, rice-huskers and loam—

Over thirsty, but nevertheless

Writes

The Pi, I am "fresh out from Home."

I have grievances many and sound,

That blossom and bloom with the years;

And imminent dangers surround

Myself and my "juvenile" peers

Who remember when Davies was lord,

When Egerton passed o'er the foam,

Ere Aitchison came—the abhorred;

Still—

We learn we are "fresh out from Home."

L'ENVOI.

Oh! babes of the Punjab Commission,

Oh! sucklings of "seventy-three,"

Consider our humble position

Remember what juniors we be!

Oh! lads without standing or credit

Vous, influence, ukal, aplomb

The Pi, in its wisdom, hath said it

We—

Are all of us "fresh out from Home."

CALCUTTA DOMESTICS.

(Indian Planter's Gazette.)

The sanitary state of Calcutta is one of those topics which seems to have a perennial interest. There are certain existing conditions inimical to health in Calcutta, the removal or mitigation of which lies much within the power of householders individually and collectively. It is perfectly well known to everybody who cares to inquire that the troops of Native servants, dependants and Native visitors, casual and permanent, which crowd the godowns of large European houses in Calcutta is very much in excess of the requirements of the family. Of course the sahib is not supposed to know anything of this, but if a raid were made on the servants' quarters of the large fashionable houses, the dwellers in fashionable Calcutta, some of them at least, would probably discover a greater number and a more varied selection of Native humanity without their own compound, not including those who disappear over the wall on their approach, than they might believe it possible to gather together there. The durwan has a vested interest in the capacity of the compound for accommodating Native dependants and visitors, and if they only come in late at night, remain moderately quiet till the early morning, and then steal quietly out to their daily calling, no one need be any the wiser, and dusturee circulates. It is beyond question that these colonies of Natives, squatted in the compounds of European houses with all their accompanying filth, and with all the possibilities of infection carried by them from the vilest Native quarters of the city, are a grave danger which householders themselves may do much to avert.

The unspeakably filthy underclothing of ayahs, bearers and other domestics which lies hid beneath the fair white upper garments is known but to those who have investigated the subject. When it is borne in mind that these domestics her together like cattle in the godowns of their masters' houses, and in the filthy evil smelling mud-huts of the Native quarters, and then come and busy themselves about the persons of their masters and mistresses, handling their clothing, folding their towels, &c., arranging the beds, nursing the babies, wiping the cooking utensils and the crockery with jharuns which serve for various other purposes which we shall not mention, no one need express any astonishment if skin and other diseases, low fevers, and occasional "seediness" are the lot of many Europeans. The wonder rather is, not that so few apparently suffer in health, or that typhoid and other ailments are comparatively rare, but that with all the elements of full-blown disease lying round them in their compounds, and following them by day and night in the attention of their domestics, so many escape with the moderate amount of troubles that fall to their lot. But it is not alone in their own compounds and in their own houses where filth and disease are nurtured and disseminated; the dhobie carries off the household wash to his own filthy hovel, where piece by piece it is spread out, divided and farmed off to his assistants. Washed in a tank which serves the varied uses of tanks in India, it is piled in close proximity to the family sleeping and living room. Often sheets, tablecloths and other articles are slept on, and rolled round the bodies of the various members of the dhobie family, in sickness and in health, and in near proximity to the dead. Men in all stages of loathsome skin and other diseases handle the household wash of dozens of European families, and bear between the filthy tank and the mud hut of the dhobie and the bungalow of the European the possible germs of disease and death.

Then the milkman and his surroundings, and ingenious ways, add another element of horror and possible disease to those already enumerated. Who has not seen or heard of water from tanks, rich in abominations, being added to swell the supply of milk? or even of wet dirty dhobies being wrung out over the milk jug to increase the daily quantity? And which of our readers is not aware of the readiness with which milk carries the germs of typhoid and other diseases? Over the dhobie and the milkman those who are sufficiently wealthy to keep their own cows and have their dhobie in their compound may exercise some control in matters of this sort; but the bulk of the poorer population is entirely at their mercy. Here we think the Municipality might step in and aid materially the comfort and general sanitary safety of the population of Calcutta. Why has no attempt been made to register and inspect all domestic servants, and all dhobies and milkmen? Not only may thieves and blackguards of the worst type move about your person, but your clothing and your milk may be handled and adulterated, and health and life endangered by Native men and women fitter for the wards of our hospitals or a prison than for services such as those enumerated. Topics such as these have again and again engaged the public attention, and again have been allowed to drop out of sight till forced on public notice in the saddest of all ways. Death carries off some well-known face, and a storm of suggestion and criticism sweeps over the public Press, to die away and be all but forgotten and leave preventable evils little better than they were before.

THE JUBILEE CELEBRATION IN BOMBAY.

(Bombay Gazette.)

In the discussion on the Municipal Budget at the recent meeting of the Corporation incidental reference was made to the expenditure which is likely to be incurred in connection with the Jubilee of Her Majesty's accession. We understand that a Committee of the Corporation appointed for that purpose have decided upon recommending that a lakh of rupees should be expended out of surplus balances for commemorating the Jubilee, twenty thousand rupees of which is to be expended in fireworks and in other evanescent demonstrations, the remaining eighty thousand or thereabouts to be appropriated to some permanent memorial of the occasion. It is worth noting that the subject was introduced at a meeting at which an increase of nearly five-and-a-half lakhs in the municipal expenditure was voted. No one seriously contends that the increase is unwarrantable. There will be much to show for it in public improvements, and as nearly four lakhs of it will represent interest and other charges on the loan for the Tansa Waterworks, there is ample assurance of a substantial return for it. But it is none the less incumbent upon us to be careful, in a year which brings so large an increase to our civic expenditure, of every addition to the charges upon the revenue. The increase, amounting to little short of two and a half lakhs, in the Consolidated Rate and the Town Duties, will be felt by the taxpayers, even though they may be persuaded that the promise of a wholesome and abundant water supply which comes with it is worth paying for. An unbudgetted expenditure of a lakh really means the swallowing up of a sum almost equivalent to the increase in the Town Duties, of which the poorer taxpayers will be reminded by augmentations in the price of ghee and grain, and possibly of oil and sugar. It will reduce the surplus balance from five lakhs, with which the year would otherwise open to four, or to three if account be taken of the one lakh surplus which is reserved by the statute. Now, the Corporation must think twice before it adopts the suggestion which, as we understand, the Committee is about to lay before it. We do not on an occasion of this kind, in which due play must be given to sentimental impulses, wish to unfairly apply the utilitarian test. No one would rudely come down upon a proposal for public rejoicings with an unsympathetic inquiry into the use of them. The question whether the game is worth the candle cannot appropriately be raised when the candle is lighted in testimony of the loyal rejoicings of a contented people. We pass by, therefore, with no disapproval that part of the Committee's recommendation which relates to the transient demonstrations of the day, suggesting only that even this part of the commemoration ought not to be left entirely in the hands of the Municipality, and that private effort and outlay might with advantage supplement or co-operate with such arrangements as the local authorities may make. In regard to the remaining eighty thousand rupees, however, we are confronted at the outset by the fact that those who propose the expenditure are so little impressed with a sense of the necessity for it that they have no definite proposal to make as to the purpose to which it shall be put. The need, with them, is not a need of means, but of an object. They require not money to spend, but an object upon which to expend it. They would, in fact, put the Corporation in the position of children who, having come into possession of an unexpected trifle, cast about them for something to spend it on lest the money should burn holes in their pockets. The project is not only indefinite and lacking in proof of necessity, but it is objectionable also because it looks uncommonly like an effort to impose upon the Corporation the whole cost of a demonstration which unless it is to be wanting in the elements of sympathy and emotion, ought not to be entirely an official demonstration. An outlay of a lakh of rupees upon the commemoration would check the flow of private enterprise, for it would render it superfluous. Before this lakh is voted for some unknown purpose we should all like to hear when the balances assigned for the well-known and necessary purpose of erecting Municipal Offices are to be utilised. Assuming that no one has yet discovered that the new site is unsuitable and ought to be abandoned for a third one, we should say that a worse commemoration of Her Majesty's Jubilee might be made than to make a serious beginning of the building of these offices; and if there is a lakh or so that the Municipality are anxious to apply for a permanent memorial of this auspicious year, they might find in the new buildings ample and useful opportunities for doing so. A worse use might be made of the occasion than to accept it as a call to begin a work which has already been so long on the mind of the Municipality that this same mind is given to capricious changes concerning it. There would be no particular reasons to insert in the wall of the new offices a tablet commemorating the fact that the Municipality began to build on one site, and finished on another. But a tablet recording that in the Jubilee year our civic fathers thought it high time to begin to build a hall for themselves, and that they built accordingly, would be an appropriate and interesting memorial of municipal patriotism, not to say of municipal wisdom as well.

SANSKRIT IN BENGAL.

(Englishman.)

In April last Pundit Mahesh Chandra Nyaratna made certain suggestions to the Viceroy regarding the encouragement of Sanskrit learning in Bengal. He pointed out that, during the reign of Sir Ashley Eden, an annual examination was instituted for the purpose of conferring titles on Sanskrit students who proved themselves worthy of them, and a few prizes and scholarships were also founded in connection with the examination, the annual cost of the whole being only Rs. 1,700. This, however, the Pundit said, had some effect in encouraging Sanskrit learning. Some of the Native nobility and gentry also gave assistance in the shape of endowments for rewards and scholarships, but the Pundit suggested that it would be as well for Government to grant a little more help and encouragement by giving pecuniary aid to the better class of indigenous Sanskrit schools, and making provision for their inspection by the Government. He estimated the cost at Rs. 15,000 per annum, of which Rs. 12,000 was to be derived from grants in aid, and Rs. 3,000 from inspection. He thought that further encouragement would be given if some of the most learned Pundits had suitable titles such as Pundit Bahadur conferred upon them, as this would raise their position in society, and might induce the richer people to give increased contributions. The Government of India referred the subject to the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal for his opinion, suggesting at the same time that, if the matter were properly represented to the wealthy and liberal Native gentlemen of Bengal, endowments for the purpose might be forthcoming to a greater extent than at present. His Honour referred the matter for the opinion of Mr. Croft, the Director of Public Instruction, who has gone fully into all the merits of the question, after consulting with several of the Native inspectors of schools, as well as Europeans, who were almost unanimous in approving of the suggestion to give increased aid to the tohs. Many of the officers thought that, if increased aid were given, some modern subjects, such as arithmetic and geography, should also be taught; but the Director considered this to be inexpedient, as the present Pundits are quite incapable of giving any such instruction, and would probably resist any attempt to force it on their pupils. It would be impossible under the present financial conditions to give aid to all the tohs throughout Bengal, and Mr. Croft suggests that it would be advisable to give aid to only certain selected scholarships which have established their character by the success of their pupils and competitive examinations. As regards the grant now to be made Mr. Croft agrees with the recommendation of the Pundit that it should be increased to Rs. 12,000 per annum, but no definite scheme is laid down as to how the increased grant is to be applied. As regards the question of endowments from rich Native gentlemen, Mr. Croft points out that the sums at present invested for scholarships and prizes for Sanskrit students amounted to Rs. 44,500, producing an income of Rs. 1,780, together with annual contributions amounting to Rs. 598 and some medals. This he considers satisfactory so far as it goes, and he has little doubt that any further applications would meet with a liberal response, and that even Municipalities and District Boards entrusted with the charge of education would also be willing to contribute for the encouragement of Sanskrit learning. The inspectors were not favourable to the proposal to confer titles upon the Pundits, and Mr. Croft suggests that, before any steps are taken in this direction, the body of Pundits should be consulted as to whether such titles would be acceptable. It is gratifying to find that the Government has been thoughtful of the interests of ancient scholarship even at a time of severe financial pressure, and it is to be hoped that the fact will be duly appreciated by those who may be naturally expected to second the efforts of the State to encourage a study that is intimately associated with the religion, the social customs, the homely traditions, and the remotest history of the country.

IMPRISONMENT AND UTILISATION OF BURMAN DACOITS.

(Madras Mail.)

Hundreds of Shans and Burmans have been sent to India under sentence of transportation for life. They are housed in palatial jails; they have enough work in the way of shoe-making or basket-making to amuse them; and they have no care for the morrow, as they are well fed, well clothed, and well housed. Now, what have the taxpayers in India done that they should be compelled to pay for the journeys and comfortable maintenance of these foreigners, who apparently have not done much to benefit India? The crime of dacoity varies much in degree. One dacoit may have been a peace-loving villager, coerced into fighting against the British by Bo Shway, and, unfortunately for himself, caught with arms in his hands; while another may be a professional gang-robber. In an Indian Jail, where the Shan and Burmese languages are not well, if at all, known, such men are treated exactly alike. There may be room to entertain such guests in years of plenty, but in time of financial pressure there will be difficulty in providing accommodation for the Indian poor who would seem to have a prior right to be lodged in the jails of their country when qualified by crime for committal. The jails in Lower Burma are full to overflowing, so Upper Burmans cannot be lodged in them; but there are few places in which manual labour is more wanted than in Upper Burma. Communications do not exist, but are urgently required as a means of pacifying the country, and the Natives of Upper Burma are not fond of road work, in fact, will nearly always refuse to do it, unless compelled by force or hunger. Under former rulers forced labour was employed on all public works, such as the walls of Ava, Sagain, Shwebo, and Mandalay; and if free men were compelled to execute such great works under Burman rulers, it is difficult to guess why prisoners should not be employed on useful works in their own fatherland under the British. Handsome jails are not necessary; temporary sheds would be run up in a few days by the prisoners; and a resolute police guard would take care of a large gang. It would be well to tattoo each prisoner with the letter "D" in red, and his number, so that he might be recognised in case of escape; but a good guard does not allow prisoners to escape. No humanitarian objections can be logically urged against marking persons whose legs are, in compliance with local fashion, so tattooed as to resemble tight-fitting breeches. The Burman has a remarkable aptitude for cutting timber, and for making use of it, as well as of the bamboo, with which he constructs houses, stockades, breast-works, bridges, furniture, &c.; and he entrenches himself with skill. Moreover, he is expert at ambuscades and bush-fighting, so that if he could be brought under discipline, he would be most useful as a Pioneer or Sapper. The discipline instilled into prisoners should be so severe that they would always remember it, and it seems quite possible that excellent companies might subsequently be formed of released prisoners. The population of Upper Burma is scanty; the soil is fertile, the water is plentiful. It becomes a matter for consideration, therefore, whether prisoners from India might not advantageously be sent to Burma, and, after a period of labour, be allowed to settle there as colonists.

BENGAL.

DARJEELING is now in the full swing of the second season, when it is thronged by European visitors anxious to get a sight of Kinchinjunga and Everest. Lord and Lady Rosebery are now there, and Prince Leopold of Prussia has gone on at once to the same place.

HIGH COURT VACATIONS.—A statement appeared in a Calcutta paper the other day to the effect that the vacation of the High Court of Fort William was to be extended, so as to run in future from August 15th to November 10th. All that need be said regarding this is that the extension has not been discussed by the Judges; and that if it is, a majority will certainly be against it. The Government of India would not be likely to entertain such a proposal for a moment.

A NATIVE SOLOMON.—Occasionally our Native Deputy Magistrates are responsible for highly original decisions. Here is one, reported by a Calcutta paper, lately delivered by an officer of high grade and long standing:—"The complainant being the wife of the defendant, there was no intention to disfigure the nose by the bite, but the flesh came off without any intention to bite it off. This is consequently a case under section 323, P.C., and as such is compoundable." The above is said to be "a verbatim copy of a judgment, and not, as might be supposed, a caricature."

THE CALCUTTA PRIMROSE LEAGUE.—A Calcutta paper says:—"The first meeting of the Calcutta Habitation of the Primrose League lately took place. Lady Lethbridge was elected President, and Mrs. A. Wilson and Mrs. Halford, Vice-Presidents; Mrs. Watkins, Honorary Secretary. The Habitation has been brought into existence with every prospect of success, and, judging from the applications coming in, will soon consist of a large number of ladies and gentlemen interested in the welfare of their country. Mrs. Watkins, of 14, Elysium-row, the Honorary Secretary, will be glad to receive the names of those wishing to join."

SUICIDE IN THE HOOGHLY.—The coroner, with a jury, viewed the body of Captain Sydney Davidson, late commander of the s.s. Novoshera, the agents of which are Messrs. Mackinnon, Mackenzie, and Co. It appears that the deceased went to the office of the agents on the 3rd inst., saying that he was tired and worried with his troubles, adding that he would leave the vessel. The agents advised him not to do so, and he then returned on board, ordering his servant to remove his property to his (servant's) house. In the evening deceased again went on shore, and at 10 P.M. he left a portmanteau and a bag containing about Rs. 1,000 in gold, silver, and notes, with the durwan of Messrs. Johnstone and Hoffmann, photographers of Chowringhee, telling him to put the property in a Mr. Buckland's room. This was the last seen of the deceased, whose body was found floating in the river on Friday evening. An inquiry touching the death of the deceased will be held in due course.

THE ROAR OF THE SUCKING DOVE.—The Indian Mirror, whose sudden goodwill towards everything English will not be kept in bounds, takes the recent liberality of Mr. George Yule—who is understood to have devoted his whole emoluments as Sheriff to charitable objects—as a basis for expatiating upon the friendliness of the races. "In the presence," we read, "of such an instance as that just given by Mr. Yule, Englishmen and Indians ought to work more harmoniously and lovingly together, and ought to be more attached to each other. It is such practical acts of goodwill and sympathy that go to draw the two races together more closely, and to promote and establish a good feeling between both. Holding in view the sacred mission of England in the East—the presence of Englishmen in this country, as our rulers, being the result, not of mere accident, but of a direct intervention of Providence—we look upon every Englishman as representing in his person a unit capable of giving a powerful impetus to the progress of the country, and as charged with the solemn responsibility of holding his dusky brethren of India by the hand, and leading them with kindly encouragement and sympathy to their elevation and welfare. The fact is always being thrown to our teeth that the people of India are ungrateful and incapable of appreciating the blessings of British rule. But this is a most ridiculous and unfounded charge. Where is the Englishman, who has done even the slightest service to the people of this country, and who has shown the least sympathy with them, that has not been amply requited for all that he may have done or tried to do for us? On the contrary, if we have been at all at fault, it has been rather that we have been disposed to magnify instead of understanding the value of such services as have been rendered to us by our English friends. We have overflowed with gratitude for small acts of even intended kindness, leave alone beneficence. The charge of ingratitude against the people of this country cannot, therefore, be sustained. Lord Ripon's case showed how a whole nation united to testify its gratitude to a departing Viceroy. Let every Englishman in India, therefore, go on doing what little he can to serve the people of this country—the country of his adoption. Let there be more George Yules, more Henry Cottons, more Allan Humes, more William Wedderburns, more Professor Wordsworths, and there will be only a feeling of love and affection among the rulers and the ruled, and the antagonism of race will soon be a thing of the past."

MADRAS.

FATAL ACCIDENT TO AN ENGINEER.—The Coconada correspondent of the Madras Times writes:—"I am sorry to have to record the untimely and melancholy death of Mr. Meick, Local Fund Engineer of Killore, while on his way to Coconada to spend his Christmas. The unfortunate gentleman was travelling with his wife and Mr. Brown, Local Fund Engineer of Coconada, by canal, and while nearing his destination, at a late hour of the night, accidentally fell over, as the boat lurched, while seated on an easy chair on the top, and never rose again. The body was found deeply imbedded in the mud, some four or five hours after the accident, when life was extinct. The moment it was discovered that Mr. Meick fell over, Mr. Brown, it is said, at the peril of his life dived repeatedly, and otherwise made strenuous efforts to rescue his companion, but without success. As a last resource the canal was dragged, when the body was discovered as already stated. The remains were brought into Coconada and buried in the Protestant Cemetery with military honours, Mr. Meick being a volunteer officer."

THE LATE MR. CUDDALORE RADHAKRISHNA IYER.—In recording the death of Mr. C. Radhakrishna Iyer, Pleader and Honorary Magistrate, Cuddalore, one of the victims of the fire at Madras, the Madras Mail says:—"He was present at the Madras Fair on Friday night and escaped at first unhurt, but having learnt that a search was being made for one of the grandsons of his friend, the late Mr. C. V. Ranganadhama Sastriyar, he rushed into the enclosure through one of the booths near the Salt Cota's gate, which was on fire. He had hardly got inside when the structure fell over him, and he emerged with his clothes on fire. Nothing daunted, he covered himself with mud, and, alone and unaided, went to his benefactor's house at Tondiarpett, walking all the way. There he lingered until seven o'clock on Sunday evening last, when he passed away. He was an unassuming and public-spirited gentleman, and his loss will be deeply felt by his numerous friends. Like many others, he owed his position in life to the late Mr. C. V. Ranganadhama Sastriyar, and to the last, he strove, like his benefactor, to lead an exemplary life. He was a powerful gymnast, and an able Sanskrit scholar."

BOMBAY.

FATAL SHOOTING ACCIDENT.—Our Poona correspondent says:—"A fatal gun accident occurred to Mrs. Turner, the wife of Mr. Joshua Turner, Superintendent of the Government Bakery here. On the previous evening Mr. Turner, accompanied by his wife, had been practising shooting with a Morris tube. During her husband's absence Mrs. Turner continued practising, seated in a low easy-chair in the verandah. The cartridge misfired, and, while endeavouring to extract it, she must have closed the breech, for the cartridge exploded, and Mrs. Turner was shot through the heart. She was found dead in the verandah by her servants."

His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught has accepted a membership in the Anthropological Society of Bombay. The Society now numbers more than three hundred subscribing members.

A MUNICIPALITY CENSURED.—The Times of India understands that the local Government have addressed to the Bombay Municipality a strong censure of their action in declining to sanction the increase of the consolidated rate from 8 per cent. to 8½ per cent. The Government point out that they sanctioned the increase in the octroi duties on the distinct understanding that a portion of the extra burden entailed upon the Municipal finances by the Tansa scheme was to fall upon the consolidated rate, and that the Corporation's action is a clear infraction of this understanding.

NORTH-WEST PROVINCES, OUDH AND PUNJAB.

Boring operations for petroleum are to be resumed at Gunda, in the Rawalpindi district.

The Lahore paper announces the death at Umballa of the death of the Rev. Robert Hind, who was for many years a resident of that station. Mr. Hine died after a short illness, and leaves behind him a large circle of relations and friends to deplore his loss.

KASHMIR.—Our Jammu correspondent informs us by telegraph that the Jumma Court is in mourning in consequence of the death of the Maharani of the present Maharaja, which occurred on the 4th January. The period of mourning will last for thirteen days. The Maharani's death is much regretted by all classes. The people from different parts of Kashmir are coming into Jammu to condole with his Highness on his bereavement.

SNOW AT SIMLA.—Our correspondent writing from Simla, under date the 11th January, says:—"Our first fall of snow during the present winter occurred yesterday morning, when for some hours it came down steadily, until at midday the ground was covered to a depth of three or four inches. A decided thaw which set in late in the afternoon, accompanied by rain, and lasted well into the night, has, however, removed nearly all signs of snow except in Jakko and the northern faces of the Simla hills. The weather continues very cold and unsettled, and more snow is expected." On a subsequent date, the same correspondent says that a heavy snow fall occurred on Thursday and Friday last. The fall, which was accompanied by boisterous weather, measured from twelve to fifteen inches in the higher and colder parts of the station.

Saturday was a bright sunny day, and there appeared every prospect of more settled weather.

Lieutenant W. C. Jephson, Bengal Commissariat Department, has been appointed Treasure Chest Officer with Colonel Stedman's column, vice Lieutenant Fordyce, reported sick.

THE REV. J. GELSON GREGSON has left India for good in the troopship Serapis. He intends forming an agency in England for the purpose of advising and securing situations for the members of the Soldiers' Abstinence Association. This association was formed by Mr. Gregson at Agra in 1862. The first society was established in the 35th Royal Sussex, and now nearly every regiment serving in India has a branch society. This association was the first organisation in the Army; and although regimental societies had existed prior to this date, there had never been an organisation for promoting temperance in the whole of the army such as this association has accomplished.

ON his return to India, Sir Frederick Roberts, a contemporary learns, leaves at once for the Peshin Valley.

MAJOR CARTER, Inspector of Submarine Mining, has returned to the Presidency from inspection duty at Moulmein and Rangoon.

It is stated that the Submarine Detachment at Fort William is engaged laying some 500lb mines at Fort Point, and that the Viceroy will witness the experiments.

COLONEL BARNES, 10th Bengal Lancers, has assumed command of the Mooltan Brigade, vice General Purvis, proceeded to Calcutta, and pending the arrival of General Galbraith from England.

HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL IN COUNCIL has approved of the "3rd or Sind, Punjab, and Indus Valley Railways Volunteer Rifle Corps," being in future designated the "3rd Punjab North-Western Railway Volunteer Rifle Corps."

THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL IN COUNCIL is pleased to admit Lance-Naik Bhagat Bir, 18th Bengal Infantry, to the 3rd class of the Order of Merit, for conspicuous gallantry in leading the way up an almost inaccessible path, in the attack on a fortified position at Toung-ta-long, near Kindat, on Oct. 9, 1886.

THE ARMY CIRCULAR of Jan. 11 contains details of a court-martial held at Ranikhet on Oct. 20 last. Private George Flaxman, 2nd Battalion Leicestershire Regiment, was charged with murdering Lance-Sergeant William Carmody on Sept. 9. The court found the prisoner guilty, and sentenced him to be hanged.

It is calculated that by the time the relief of troops from Burma begins in April, there will be 17,000 Indian police in Upper and Lower Burma and about 12,000 or 13,000 local police recruited from the indigenous races. Three-fourths of this total force would be stationed in the Upper Province. Recruits for the 4,000 police now being raised in India are coming in freely.

A BANGALORE paper remarks that the promotion of Colonel G. S. Hooper to the honorary rank of Major-General on retirement will hardly be hailed with delight by the croakers at home who followed in the wake of the Times' special correspondent at Mandalay. "Knowing General Hooper, as we do, to be a most zealous and energetic officer, we congratulate him on his merited promotion and advancement to the Major-General's list."

OFFICERS commanding Madras regiments have been requested to submit at once to the general officers commanding their respective brigades the names of any non-commissioned officers in their regiments who are acquainted with Burmese, and who are qualified to act as drill instructors to the police levies now being organised in Upper Burma. Such drill instructor will receive staff pay of Rs. 5 per mensem while so employed, and brigadier-generals commanding are requested to place their services at the disposal of the local police authorities for such employment.

THE DARJEELING correspondent of a Calcutta paper writes:—"Colonel Lloyd, the commandant of our local volunteers, has started with his carbine and a hundred rounds of ammunition to gather laurels among the dacoits in Burma, and learn how to lead his gallant men, should their services ever be required, against the enemies of their country. He has hungered for years to open fire on an enemy, and volunteered for service in Cabul, but was refused. He was not, however, a colonel of a fine volunteer regiment then, and will, no doubt, find little difficulty in gratifying his wish this time. All here will be glad to see him back among us hale and sound again."

THE Commander-in-Chief directs that adjutants of Bengal cavalry and infantry regiments, including the regiments of the Punjab Frontier Force, who are not in possession of musketry certificates should be sent to the schools of musketry for a course of instruction in preference to other officers of Native regiments. Officers commanding Native regiments are requested to note in their next annual confidential reports whether the adjutants of the regiments under their command have qualified in musketry. His Excellency also desires it to be notified that in future no officer will be permanently appointed adjutant of a Bengal cavalry or infantry regiment until he is in possession of a musketry certificate.

THE following further decisions in connection with the leave rules for the Staff Corps are published in Army Circulars.—1. Extensions of leave, except on medical certificate or in special or urgent cases in which the Secretary of State decides according to circumstances, cannot be granted without the assent of the proper authority in India as defined in Clause V. of the rules. 2. Extensions of leave beyond one year under the new rules are not claimable in any way as a right, but are admissible only at the discretion of the proper authority, and then on special and urgent grounds. 3. An officer subject to the leave rules for the Staff Corps on promotion to Major-General will not be granted leave under those rules, and if permitted to reside in England or elsewhere out of India will be restricted to the English pay of his rank.

SIR R. LETHBRIDGE, M.P., left Calcutta for Colombo on Saturday, and after a short stay at that station returns to England.

THE Secunderabad paper understands that Colonel Marshall's appointment as Secretary and Administrative Adviser to his Highness the Nizam is for a term of two years, on a salary of Rs. 2,500 a month, and not Rs. 3,000 as previously stated.

HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN-EMPERESS has been graciously pleased to accept a copy of Colonel W. F. B. Laurie's work "Distinguished Anglo-Indians."

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

SHE.*

"She"—what a title! aye, what a book! If the design of the work be to give what the author terms the "creeps," assuredly Mr. Haggard must be warmly congratulated upon the success of his efforts. Not a chapter but what contains some thrilling adventure, some horrible experience; there is enough and to spare. At one time a miserable wretch is to be "hot-potted," a punishment which consists in having a red-hot iron pan placed upon the head and shoulders, after which, when the victim is roasted to death, he is eaten as a bonne bouche! At another time travellers are crossing miles upon miles of desolate, scarcely passable, fever-stricken swamps; then there are precipices to be climbed, and on one occasion to be crossed, by a flying jump from 12 to 14 feet in width, at an altitude which make the reader giddy to read thereof; and little less appalling must it have been, too, for a wandering traveller to find himself alone in a subterranean cavern, with the light extinguished by the draught, and with no knowledge as to the means of exit from this living tomb!

Yet withal we are constrained to avow that "She" is not attractive in its inception. Dealing with scenes where the dead and the living mingle night and day in horrible contiguity, feelings of horror are so constantly aroused that the flesh literally creeps with loathing and disgust. Fancy "mummified" bodies being taken from their last resting-place and lighted as torches to illumine a cave wherein ghastly orgies were performed for the edification of "She's" guests! Yet this is but one solitary incident in this "chamber of horrors!" Scarcely less attractive is the melancholy desolation of the land wherein the scene is laid—dreary wastes, slimy swamps, snake-breeding morasses, pestilential lagoons, give to the tale an air of desolation, most depressing and enervating. Even Mark Tapley could scarcely contemplate such scenes without a shudder! Nor is the heroine altogether free from the taint of antipathy. True she is painted as beautiful—superbly beautiful, beyond compare—ravishing with delight the astonished eyes which happens to behold her lovely form, her exquisite figure, her perfect features, her faultless model; but her mind was debased with passion, the passion of jealousy and revenge. She inspires fear and awe rather than love and respect. If, too, her life was grand though melancholy, her death was revolting and harrowing in the highest degree. The blood literally curdles in the veins as the closing scenes of this extraordinary book flit across the eye of imagination. The weird unearthliness of the tale, its strangeness so unlike any conception in the annals of literature, its repulsiveness, so little "of the earth earthy," may justify a claim to originality; but Mr. Haggard would do better, to our mind, to restrict his fertile imagination to scenes of this mundane sphere more in harmony with human instincts, more in unison with those feelings which are too sacred to be wounded with impunity, feelings which prompt a respect for the dead, and a reverence for the remains of bygone generations. But reader, read!

COUNTRY LIFE IN LA GRUYERE†

"To read Scioboret is to know La Gruyere. He has turned into literature the music of the Ranz des Vaches." So wrote the Spectator. Everyone knows La Gruyere by repute, thanks to the cheese which has conferred upon the district the immortality of fame. Few, too, but are familiar with the Swiss mountain songs to which the writer alludes. Rossini's opera of William Tell has brought, at any rate, one of them home to every door, but it may safely be affirmed there are not many conversant with Scioboret's tales, and the fair translator merits the thanks of the public for enabling them to read in plain honest English, in thorough keeping with the simplicity of the original text, these exquisite "pastorals" of country life.

To enjoy them thoroughly, to appreciate their charms to the full extent, needs familiarity with the hills and vales of La Gruyere, and an intimate acquaintance with the scenery of the Canton no less than with the ways and habits of the people who pass a tranquil and happy existence removed from the cares, the excitement, the anxieties inseparable from life amongst toiling, struggling, fighting, intriguing nationalities, whose ambition is "glory," and whose aim is aggrandisement. Nevertheless, these simple tales will, we are confident, be read by the many who can appreciate plain, unaffected simplicity, who can sympathise with misfortune, albeit the sufferer is an unsophisticated country lass or a poor widowed matron, who can follow with eagerness the coquetry and artless allurements of a maiden whose aspirations do not soar higher than a humble home, an honest conscience, and a happy, contented husband. If, too, more than mere amusement for the hour be the aim and object of the reader there is food for reflection in the "humour and arch satire of the artist," who has learnt the secret that true wisdom is not necessarily veiled behind high-flown language or pretentious sentiments, but is to be found in the path of everyday life, in the events of the hour, in the hum-drum toil for daily bread, in the cottage, in the fields, in the woods—everywhere and anywhere.

Amidst so many works of fiction which excite the mind and panders to the lower passions of poor, fallen humanity, it is refreshing to turn for a while to nature pure and unalloyed, to read without blushing, to ponder without a sense of horror, alarm, and disgust, tales that draw mankind from themselves, that teach them to appreciate the beauties of creation, to linger amidst the paths of nature, to see in the earth, the air, the sky, something to admire, somewhat to please, should always be welcome. This is the aim and object of M. Sciobere's stories, so much appreciated by French-speaking nations across the water; and thanks to a singularly felicitous translation on the part of Miss Congreve we in Old England can now quaff the same cup of enjoyment, profit, and pleasure.

WILD ANIMALS.*

Works on Natural History are so numerous that it might seem somewhat out of place for a fresh competitor to enter the same arena; yet withal Mr. Fortuné Nott has made out a good case for the appearance of the volume which has recently been published. He argues, and it must be conceded with fairness, that the greater number of existing works comprise so much that is technical and scientific that the ordinary seeker after information is perplexed and confused as he wanders through labyrinths of learned detail not at all necessary for those who desire merely general knowledge. Other treatises, again, aim rather at amusement than instruction, so that the bear appears as "Master Bruin," the fox as "Reynard," and the lion as "King Leo." This is all well enough for the nursery, but scarcely fitted for persons of maturer years anxious to learn, but unwilling to treat with levity a subject replete with interest to such as can admire Nature's handiwork in the animal world. In these circumstances Mr. Nott has endeavoured to teach without wearying, to explain without exaggerating, to allure without misguiding, and his efforts merit the highest commendation. Avoiding "travellers' tales"—the pitfall of the naturalist—he has not eschewed anecdote when the facts were trustworthy, and the source of information beyond dispute; his research has been as enormous, as judicious; and it would be difficult to find a work more calculated to promote a study of animal creation in all its beauty and charm. Even the illustrations are scrupulously exact, for in place of the time-honoured drawings, wherein fancy plays a prominent part, the author has selected "phototype reproductions" of photographs from life. Faithful accuracy is thus secured, and if the result be a sacrifice of picturesqueness, at any rate trustworthiness reigns supreme and beyond cavil.

The work is bulky in size—this is its only drawback—but in these days, when the world expects much for little, this perhaps is a merit rather than otherwise. As, too, the contents are interesting, it seems ungenerous to find fault with quantity when the quality is assured. As a present for boys "Wild Animals" may with advantage take a turn with "hair-breath escapes" and "thrilling adventures," albeit in both respects Mr. Nott has at times a tale to unfold which even schoolboy life would not despise.

OLAV THE KING, AND OLAV, KING AND MARTYR.†

Mr. Vicary, whose pleasant anecdotes illustrative of Norwegian life have already been the subject of notice in our columns, has, in this volume, utilised his exceptional familiarity with Norse literature by giving a free abstract of the legends preserved by the Skjalds, or bards, of two rulers bearing the old Norse appellation of Olav, as illustrative of a connected narrative, embracing the entire career of each.

Of all Norse heroes, these appear to have found the greatest favour among the Skjalds, and, though there may have been many equal to them—were there not brave men before Agamemnon?—the exploits of the latter have not been handed down to posterity with anything like the same fulness of detail.

There is no risk of confounding the two Olavs, for, as is explained (p. 129) by the author, "It was the custom in the north for a man to be called by his baptismal name, then his father's name, and thirdly, by a nickname or surname." These nicknames seem to have been purely—as well as sometimes inconveniently—personal, and did not descend, as among the Romans, to whom they became family names, as in the well-known instances of the poet Ovid, and of the orator Cicero, whose respective surnames, Naso, "Nosey," and Cicero, "Pimpily," were derived, not from any personal peculiarity of the individual, but from those of a more or less distant ancestor. Hence the first Olav is "Tryggvesson," the second "Haraldson," the son of Harald.

The narratives of the careers of both are exceedingly well told by Mr. Vicary, and are replete with interest to English readers. Olav Haraldson, among his other exploits as a Viking, besieged London, and took its fortifications "in reverse" by attacking, and forcing a passage for his fleet through, London Bridge, then supported on piles driven into the river bed (p. 126). Then, attaching himself for a while to the service of King Athelred (the spelling is the author's), he remained in that employ three years, defeating the Danes at Ringmer (probably the place of that name near Lewes, in Sussex), and protecting the South Coast. On his return home he became, by a judicious mixture of conciliation and threats, King of Norway; while his ambassadors, sent to appease the wrath of the King of Sweden, Oluf, who affected to regard the new ruler of Norway as a rebel, so far exceeded their instructions that they secured, as their master's bride, a Swedish Princess, Ingegerd, to whom Olav Haraldson was to be married, nolens volens.

At home Olav propagated Christianity much as the early Mahomedans propagated Islam. "Faith or the sword," was the watchword. This led, of course, to many "conversions," in which Faith was conspicuous by its absence. Appropos of this, Mr. Vicary gives a story which will bear repeating, and which may "give pause" to folks who are anxious a tout prix to get nominal converts. It seems (p. 167) that candidates for baptism received a white robe, and that this was an inducement to be baptised more than once. "On one occasion the white dresses, from the large number of converts, grew scarce, and other garments had to be substituted, which an experienced convert anathematised. He had been baptised twenty times, and always had a white dress, and declined to become a Christian for the twenty-first time in consequence."

Olav, though brave as a lion, and not unskilful as a general, seems to have been wholly wanting in the qualities of a statesman. He managed, in a few years, to make enemies on every side. Ultimately a strong combination was formed against him, and he was defeated and killed in 1030, at Stiklestad, it being (p. 241) his twentieth battle. His devotion to the cause of Christianity ensured him the appellation of martyr, and that of saint, to which latter his career can, from a modern point of view, hardly be said to have entitled him. His biography presents an admirable picture of Norse life and manners in the time of our last Saxon kings; and its story is told by Mr. Vicary with spirit, and with an unfeigned interest in the subject, which can hardly fail to impart itself to the reader.

THE INDIAN MAGAZINE.*

The most important subject touched on in both the above numbers of this always interesting magazine is one the momentous character of which can hardly be exaggerated—the social relations between the Europeans and Natives in India; and on these we have interesting and valuable remarks from Dr. Francis in his lecture on "Social Life in India," and from "M. A. J." in a well considered paper in the February number. It must be confessed, however reluctantly, that there is a deplorable unreality in the attempts, however well meant, which are constantly being made to bring the Hindu into unrestrained intercourse with the European. The two do not coalesce, the one curdles the other. "M. A. J." contrasts the relations between the two with those which exist between Hindus and Mussulmans, forgetting, apparently, that the Moslem has been a denizen of India for more centuries than the European can count decades. Still, we may hope that, by the aid of such disinterested endeavours for the benefit of Hindus as the provision of education, and, still more, of medical aid for women, they may at length learn to look at us as something besides people who "eat beef and drink brandy." But we cannot force the pace: patience must have her perfect work, or it never will become "entire, wanting nothing."

Of the other papers we must especially commend Miss White's excellent and encouraging account of her Zenana work in that head-quarters of Mohammadanism in India, Hyderabad (Deccan), and a naïve and spirited translation by Mr. St. A. St. John of portions of the "Burmese Hitopadesa."

"The Illustrated Naval and Military Magazine" has a very strong article on the "Defenceless Condition of London and our Coast Line," which ought to attract attention from the authorities. The commencement of a series of articles upon our Indian Military Stations, by Dr. Dickenson, is a move in a right direction, and properly followed up ought to make this popular magazine eagerly looked for by Indian subscribers.

"The Army and Navy Magazine," under its present editorial management, continues to improve. In the present number the article on the "Chinese at Sea," by the Hon. H. N. Shore, and that on the "West Point Academy," by H. Naidley, are especially interesting. The early career of Lord Strathnairn is told by a writer whose abilities to do justice to his subject are beyond dispute; but it seems strange that the matter has not been treated of before, for no more gallant soldier than Sir Hugh Rose did England ever have. A continuation of this article will be welcome.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 7, 1887.

IN MEMORIAM.—A. W. MOORE, C.B.

WHEN in the summer of 1885 Mr. A. W. Moore accepted the offer of retirement made to each and every member of the Indian Home Establishment, it was felt that Government had lost the services of by far the ablest man in that department of the State, and it seemed an irony of fate that the one public servant who was wanted to be retained was almost the only one who elected to shake off the dust of duty from his shoes. But Fate stepped into the arena and, unexpected as it was welcome, the news transpired that Mr. Moore had been offered the appointment of Private Secretary to Lord Randolph Churchill, who, at that time, held the Seals at the India Office. Of course he accepted such a fine opportunity of returning to harness, and equally of course a man of such remarkable powers and conspicuous industry made his mark. When, therefore, he quitted the post on the return of the Liberal Cabinet to power, it was felt that the well-deserved honour of a Civil Companionship of the Bath was but a prelude to further distinction should the occasion present itself. So, on the promotion of Sir Owen Burne to the Council, it surprised no one, but though it pleased many, to learn that the "old official hand" had returned to his official labours, but this time to enjoy the honourable, important, and coveted appointment of Political Secretary.

True, Mr. Moore had lived in an atmosphere of diplomacy from his very birth, for his father was Major Moore, who, in earlier life, had held high station at the Court of Haidarabad, then, as now, the most turbulent centre of intrigue in the intriguing East; and who, in his later days, was the last of the famous twenty-four potentates in Leadenhall-street, the dispensers of justice to toiling multitudes, and the rulers of the destinies of countless thousands. Nevertheless it was no easy task to assume a mantle worn by such distinguished predecessors as Sir John Kaye and Sir Owen Burne, both great, though different in their powers and diverse in their actions—the one fortiter in re, the other suaviter in modo—and yet if his life had been spared there are good grounds for supposing that the clear, steady brain of the third of the trio might, and would, have made its mark—there would have been "footprints on the sands of time." It is not concealed—it would be affectation to assert otherwise—that the youngest of the three lacked that imaginative fancy which should and must play so important a part in the political history of a nation; but if in this respect he might have failed, on the other hand his acute perception, his severe logic, his calm, unimpassioned reasoning would have led him to avoid many a pitfall into which a less cautious wanderer in the usages of diplomacy would have been likely to have fallen. But of what use reflecting on the future of a man who has passed away ere he had an opportunity of displaying his abilities in the highest post to which a Civil Servant of the Crown can aspire? It must suffice to drop a tear of regret at the premature death of a gentleman the soul of uprightness and rectitude, an honour to the service in which he passed his apprenticeship, respected for his abilities, and admired for his probity; if brusque yet honest, if abrupt yet fearless, true in his friendships, and, perhaps, above all and beyond all, because it is so rare a virtue, possessing the courage of his convictions.

TRUEMAN, Colonel T., Staff Corps, cantonment magistrate, Belgaum, is allowed furlough to Europe for six months, on medical certificate, with the necessary subsidiary leave.

THE wife of a leading member of non-official society in Bombay has done violence to the views of those who favour the increased fusion of Europeans and Indians by declining to be taken into dinner by a Native gentleman at Government House. The lady and her husband sent for their carriage and left before dinner was announced: their action, our correspondent adds, "being strongly supported by the whole community." The gentleman was a Mahomedan, a barrister by profession, an ex-member of the Governor's Council, and personally unobjectionable. There may perhaps be something more in the incident than meets the eye, but on the face of it our sympathies are certainly not with Bombay society.

He commanded the headquarters detachment of the Bengal Sappers and Miners in the Agra District at the taking of Futteh-pore, Sikri, &c.; served as adjutant of the same corps at the siege and capture of Lucknow; was specially employed under Brigadier Douglas in the Ghazipore and Allahabad Districts, and was present at the final capture of the stronghold of the rebel Kanwar Singh, at Jugdespore. He received the medal and two clasps for the whole campaign. In 1862, when the late Lieut.-Colonel Patrick Stewart, C.B., R.E., was sent to Persia to pave the way for the construction of the Indo-European telegraph, Lieutenant Champain was specially selected to accompany him, and the next year he returned to Persia to carry out the Persian portion of the line. On the death of Colonel Stewart at Constantinople, in the beginning of 1865, Champain was associated with Major-General Sir Frederick Goldsmid in the chief direction of the whole system between England and India, and on Sir F. Goldsmid's retirement in 1869, Champain became sole director-in-chief. Some account of what he and his brother engineers did in Persia during the years of their employment there will be found in Sir F. Goldsmid's work, "Telegraph and Travel." Ever since 1869 the direction of this most important system of lines has been in Colonel Champain's hands. All the duties were performed in a way that won the entire confidence of the Government. One of these duties, which recurred pretty frequently during his 18 years' tenure, was the representation of the Indian Government at telegraph conferences on the Continent, and the tact and judgment with which he represented his Government carried great weight with his foreign colleagues, with whom he was personally very popular from his gay and courteous disposition. His early loss will be widely regretted. About a year ago his long services were acknowledged through the mediation of Lord Randolph Churchill, then Secretary of State for India, by the honour of the K.C.M.G. His health was already failing. A few weeks ago he was persuaded to go to Cannes, but it was too late. During his few years' employment in Persia Champain's character made a strong impression on the people and officials of that country. The year before last the Shah sent him a sword of honour, which our Government gave him special permission to accept. This was an honour quite unprecedented. Sir John Bateman-Champain married a daughter of the late Sir Frederick Currie, and leaves two sons, the eldest being Lieutenant Arthur P. Bateman-Champain, of the Norfolk Regiment.

COLONEL R. C. WHITING.

On 31st December were interred in the cemetery at Umballa, with military honours, the remains of Lieutenant-Colonel Robert Cony Whiting, Bengal Staff Corps, retired, who died at Nahun on 29th December, after a long and painful illness, in his 62nd year. Colonel Whiting entered the service of the East India Company in 1844 as ensign in the old 70th Native Infantry, and was present at the battles of Chillianwala and Gujrat (at the latter of which he was severely wounded), and was awarded the Punjab war medal with two clasps. He then served in the China War with the same regiment, which, after the Mutiny, by change of designation, had become the 11th Bengal Native Infantry, and obtained the war medal and clasp. He also served with the same corps in the Bhootan Campaign, and obtained the Indian Frontier medal and clasp for this service. He retired as lieutenant-colonel about fourteen years ago, and took service with his Highness the Rajah of Sirmoor as commandant of his troops, which he brought into a high state of efficiency, and accompanied them in the Afghan Campaign as far as the Kuram Valley, his command forming a portion of the Native Prince's Contingent. For this service he obtained the Afghan war medal, and was also presented by Government with a sword of honour. He died deeply regretted by his many relatives, connections and friends, by the Native prince under whom he had served, and the soldiers he had commanded for so many years, a body of whom accompanied his remains from Nahun, and laid him with their own hands in his grave.

DEATH OF SIR CHARLES MACGREGOR.

[REUTER'S TELEGRAM.]

CAIRO, FEB. 5.

General Sir Charles Macgregor, of the Bengal Staff Corps, died here to-day.

The death of Sir Charles Macgregor deprives the Anglo-Indian army of one of its best soldiers, and perhaps the very ablest writer it possessed on military questions connected with the defence of India. The event can scarcely be called unexpected, as Sir Charles had been in indifferent health for twelve months, and nine months ago he resigned his appointment as commander of the Punjab Frontier Force to return to England in the hope of restoring his health. After visiting several of our watering-places he left England for Egypt three months ago, but none of these precautions availed to effect the much-needed cure. Another gallant career is thus abruptly cut short, and the commander of the 3rd Brigade at the signal battle of Candahar has followed at only a brief interval Sir Herbert Macpherson, the leader of the 1st Brigade, leaving Sir Thomas Baker alone to represent General Roberts's chief lieutenants on that memorable occasion. Sir Charles Macgregor was better known among us as a writer on the military aspect of the Russian advance towards India than as a dashing soldier. Most of his works are treated as confidential handbooks, and although the Russian Government is known to possess copies of them they are none the less preserved in the greatest possible official secrecy. His travels in Persia and Beloochistan have, however, been published, and he was the first to point out the great strategical importance of Sarakhs, now in the hands of Russia, which as long ago as 1875 he said would be used by that Power as a sword of offence for the accomplishment of her designs on Herat. His exhaustive report on the Russian advance towards India two years ago created a great sensation in official circles, as it gave an unusually favourable estimate of Russia's power to carry out her aggressive schemes in Afghanistan and of the difficulties the Indian Government might have in placing an adequate force in the field. It is for such work as this that Sir Charles Macgregor will be held in highest esteem, as his early death has prevented his showing in independent command those admirable and soldierlike qualities which all his friends believed him to possess and the tactical knowledge exhibited in all his writings.

Charles Metcalfe Macgregor was born in the year 1840. His father, Major Robert Macgregor, of the Bengal Artillery, was a distinguished officer of that corps. Charles received his education at Marlborough, and entered the Indian military service in 1856. He was present at many of the battles of the Indian Mutiny, being especially distinguished at the taking of the Machi Bewan at Lucknow, and his official record for the campaign runs that he was wounded three times and mentioned four times in despatches. From India he went with Sir Hope Grant in 1860 on the China Expedition, and in the advance on Peking he received two severe wounds. He did not long remain inactive after the conclusion of this war, as he was employed with the expeditionary force sent into Bhotan in 1864-6. In this war also he received two severe wounds. The very next year, after the close of this mountain war, he was appointed to join the Abyssinian expedition, and he was fortunate enough to return for the first time without receiving any wounds. At this point in his career Macgregor had attained the rank of lieutenant-colonel, being perhaps the very youngest officer of that grade in the Anglo-Indian army. As a long peace followed the return from Magdala it was decided to employ Colonel Macgregor in the compilation of information relating to the countries west of India, and during the following years he produced gazetteers of the North-West Frontier, giving a full account of the tribes of Afghanistan, Persia, Asiatic Turkey, and Caucasia. These volumes placed in an accessible form for ready reference all the information on the subject possessed by the Government of India, and with rare exceptions contain the most authentic particulars of the different subjects to which they relate.

After the conclusion of these desk labours, which had only been varied during a period of seven years by some active work as chief of the transport for famine relief in Tirhoot in 1874, Macgregor determined on a tour in north west Persia. This resolve was hastened by the death of his first wife, a daughter of the late Sir Henry Marion Durand, and the journey to Meshed, Sarakhs, and along the frontier of Khorasan resulted in his collecting the material for two very interesting volumes, published three years later under the title of "Travels in Khorasan." He attempted to enter Herat, but he was received very discourteously on the borders by the Afghan officials and eventually abandoned his intention. In the following year he made a tour through the deserts of Beloochistan with the late Captain Lockwood, and in 1882 he published a very interesting account of a journey which presented few features of interest, except, perhaps, that Azad Khan, the redoubtable chief of Kharan, on whose conduct depends the tranquillity of this region, was then first introduced to the English reader. If we except his report on the Russian advance towards India, this was his last literary production, and it is improbable that even if he had recovered he would have taken up his pen to write any more on a subject which he considered the sword alone could decide.

It was immediately after his return from these travels that the opportunity arose for once more employing his talents in the field, and in a higher capacity than on any former occasion. The outbreak of the Afghan war in 1878 caused his well-known services to be enlisted, and in the first campaign he acted as Deputy Quartermaster-General and Chief of the Staff to Sir Samuel Browne. When the second campaign began in the following autumn, after the Cabul massacre, Sir Charles Macgregor was at once appointed Chief of the Staff to Sir Frederick Roberts. He bore a prominent share in all the operations round Cabul, and on the departure of the army to relieve Candahar he was intrusted with the command of the 3rd Brigade. On the day previous to the battle of Candahar he seized the Picket Hill after some severe skirmishing, but in the battle itself his brigade was in reserve, and the impetuosity of the leading regiments of the 1st and 2nd Brigades left very little to be done by those in their rear. However, the name of Macgregor will always be associated with this memorable victory. After the flight of Aycoob and the gradual withdrawal of the English Army, General Macgregor was commissioned to lead a primitive expedition into the Murree country. This tribe, which had long been the most lawless on the north-east Belooch frontier, gave in its submission, and it is gratifying to note that their conduct since this event has been far better than at any earlier period of our relations with them. Upon the close of the Afghan war General Macgregor was appointed Quartermaster-General in India, and on the expiration of his five years of office he was given the command of the Punjab Frontier Force, but his health, which had always been remarkably good, then began to break up, and twelve months later he found himself obliged to take sick leave and, after a further brief interval, to resign this much-coveted command. Sir Charles Macgregor received the honour of K.C.B. for the Candahar Campaign, and he was also a Companion of both the Indian Orders. He married a second time, in 1883, Charlotte Mary, daughter of Mr. Frederick W. Jardine. His death in his prime deprives India of an excellent soldier and able general, who seemed destined to take the highest place among the leaders of the Indian army if ever it should be called upon to perform the most arduous duty of defending its country against a foreign invader. His loss will be deeply mourned by his country, to which he has bequeathed a mass of solid information and sober judgment relating to the feasibility of a Russian invasion of India which no prudent statesman can afford to treat with indifference, and which is fortunately expressed in the plainest language, so that all may comprehend its meaning. If General Macgregor's statements sometimes partook of the tone of Cassandra's prophecies, it must be remembered that he considered the chief peril arose from our apathy and over confidence, for he never doubted our capacity to meet and repel the danger once we recognised its full extent. The presence of such men as Sir Charles Macgregor in our Anglo-Indian army was in itself a guarantee of security, and his premature death is a great loss.

THE death of Mr. E. R. C. Douglas, C.I.E., is announced. For upwards of thirty-one years Mr. Douglas was one of the most efficient and valued officials in the Post Office Department. During this long period he took an active, and at times a prominent share in promoting the many progressive changes and reforms introduced into the Department, and when he retired in December, 1885, the Director-General of the Post Office took occasion to express his deep sense of the loss which the Department had sustained in the withdrawal of a valued and universally esteemed colleague.

OPINIONS.

The Calcutta Review for October reached us a day or two ago, and a glance at its contents shows that the number more than sustains the reputation which this old and favourite publication is again achieving. The Review is rapidly regaining the position which it . . . there is no fear of the Indian Review, or the Asiatic Quarterly rivalling it in public favour. — Statesman, October, 1886.

. . . The best service which I ever rendered in India, or, indeed, for India, was the establishment, single-handed, of the Calcutta Review, which has done far more for Indian literature than anything I have written under my own name. — J. W. KAYE, Athenaeum Club, June 23, 1872.

The Calcutta Review has given us valuable articles on the army. Some from the pen of Sir Henry Lawrence, who wrote with the spirit of prophecy, of the coming storm of which he was one of the noblest victims. — Address of the C-in-C. at the U.S. Inst. of India.

. . . The Calcutta Review has not only throughout its career reflected the highest honour on its public-spirited promoters and its well-known distinguished contributors, but has done much to help forward the reconstruction of our system of governing India. — Westminster Review.

NAVAL AND MILITARY GAZETTE.

ESTABLISHED 1833.

EVERY SATURDAY. PRICE SIXPENCE.

The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette has acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent course of its staff of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A series of Illustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" freely opens its correspondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for interchange of opinion is afforded, such as is offered by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supplements."

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" circulates largely throughout India and the Colonies. It is supplied direct to the Army and Marine bureaux of the French, Russian, and other Governments, and it is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Services, especially of the German, French, and American Armies, who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

A MAGAZINE THAT GIVES EXPRESSION
TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF THE PEOPLE OF
INDIA.

There are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing MONTHLY (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is especially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE

COUGHES, COLDS, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—Dr. J. O. BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff) discovered a REMEDY to denote which he coined the word CHLORODYNE. Dr. Browne is the SOLE INVENTOR, and, as the composition of Chlorodyne cannot possibly be discovered by Analysis (organic substances defying distillation), and since the formula has never been published, it is evident that any statement to the effect that a compound is identical with Dr. Browne's Chlorodyne must be false.

This warning is necessary, as many persons have purchased by false representations.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE. Vice-Chancellor Sir W. PAGE WOOD stated publicly in Court that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was UNDOUBTEDLY the INVENTOR of CHLORODYNE, that the whole story of the defendant Freeman was deliberately untrue, and he regretted to say it had been sworn to.—See The Times, July 18th. 1884.

DIARRHŒA, DYSENTERY. GENERAL BOARD OF HEALTH, London, REPORT that it ACTS as a CHARM, one dose generally sufficient. Dr. GIBBON, Army Medical Staff, Calcutta, states: "2 DOSES COMPLETELY CURED ME OF DIARRHŒA." From Strains & Co., Pharmaceutical Chemists, Simla, Jan. 5, 1884.

DEAR SIR.—We congratulate you upon the widespread reputation this justly-esteemed medicine has earned for itself all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars, and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances ad infinitum of the extraordinary efficacy of DR. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE in Diarrhœa and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia, the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Choleraic Diarrhœa, and even in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power.

We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's, from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist to prescriber and patient alike. We are, Sir, faithfully yours, STILES & CO., Members of the Pharmac. Society of Great Britain, The Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is the TRUE PALLIATIVE in NEURALGIA, GOUT, CANCER, TOOTHACHE, RHEUMATISM.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a liquid medicine which assuages PAIN of EVERY KIND, affords a calm, refreshing sleep WITHOUT HEAD-ACHE, and INVIGORATES the nervous system when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts short all attacks of EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC, PALPITATION, HYSTERIA.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.—The IMMENSE SALE of this REMEDY has given rise to many UNSCRUPULOUS IMITATIONS. Be careful to observe Trade Mark. Of all Chemists. Is. 1jd., 2s. 9d., and 4s. 6d. SOLE MANUFACTURER, J. T. DAVENPORT, 38, Russell St., W.C.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 14, 1887.

General Intelligence.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 28th January; from Allahabad and Madras to the 26th January; and from Calcutta to the 25th January.

H.E. THE VICEROY will perform the ceremony of opening the new railway bridge over the Ganges at Benares, which is rapidly approaching completion.

THE DUKE AND DUCHESS OF CONNAUGHT have arrived at Ajmere, where the Duke received an address of welcome from the Municipality and inspected the Merwarra Battalion. After visiting the Taraghur Sanitarium and Mayo College, their Royal Highnesses left for Mount Abu.

THE Governor of Bombay has arrived at Bombay, from his Sind tour.

THE Governor of Madras will probably go on tour in the southern part of the Presidency towards the middle of February, arriving at Ootacamund a month later.

GREAT preparations are being made all over the country for the celebration of the Queen's Jubilee on the 16th inst. Bombay alone will spend close upon Rs. 2,00,000 on the occasion, independently of private efforts.

In Hyderabad the Nizam will give a grand banquet, and there will be illuminations and fireworks; but, what is more important, his Highness will found a Victoria Zenana Hospital for purdah women as a Jubilee memorial. There will be entertainments at the Residency, and races and sports at Secunderabad. His Excellency the Minister has also issued orders to the district officials to arrange for a due celebration of the Jubilee throughout the Nizam's dominions.

It is stated that the Viceroy will leave Calcutta earlier than usual this year. His Excellency will probably leave early in March for Lahore, where there is some idea of holding a Jubilee durbar.

It seems likely that when the Commander-in-Chief goes to Peshin in February the whole tour may be done by railway train.

THE Quetta line by latest accounts is now close up to the Khojak, and General Browne hopes to be through with the Hurnai line to the Peshin plateau before many weeks have passed. The weather, however, has been untoward of late, and this may delay him.

SIR OLIVER ST. JOHN is returning to his post at Quetta, from Calcutta. He will meet Sir Frederick Roberts in Beluchistan when the Chief makes his tour there.

MR. HORACE COCKERELL, of the Bengal Board of Revenue, has been granted eight months' furlough.

MR. W. MERK, C.S., has arrived in Calcutta from the Afghan Frontier.

MR. J. W. BUYERS, Engineer-in-Chief to the Assam Railway Survey, has been appointed Manager of the Burma State Railway, vice Mr. Mathews, whose term of office has expired. Mr. Parker has been appointed Engineer-in-Chief of the railway party engaged in the survey of the proposed extension of the Baroda line from Godhra to Rutlam.

THE plans and estimates for the Jhansi-Baroda section of the Indian Midland Railway have been passed, and work will now proceed rapidly on that portion of the line.

THE preparation of estimates has been ordered for showing the comparative cost of doubling the Rajputana-Malwa Railway, or of converting it into a broad-gauge line. Colonel Pemberton, Consulting Engineer for Guaranteed Railways, has been deputed to go over the line and give any general instructions required as to the sort of estimate to be adopted.

THE question of Simla allowances is now under consideration, and probably a revised scale will be issued before the Government of India next visits the summer capital.

SIR CHARLES SARGENT, Chief Justice of Bombay, intends to proceed on furlough to Europe in May next.

THE HON. R. OLDFIELD, one of the Judges of the High Court at Allahabad, and the Father of the Bengal Civil Service, is expected to retire in March next.

SIR ROGER LETHBRIDGE has left Calcutta for Colombo, where he stays for a fortnight, on his way to England.

It is probable that Colonel Erskine, Commissioner of Sitapore, who was lately summoned to Calcutta by the Government of India, will succeed Mr. J. B. Lyall as Resident in Mysore.

THE Post Office in India is worked at a loss. The figures for the past two years are as follows:—1884-85: Revenue, Rs. 1,04,71,299. Expenditure, Rs. 1,27,04,540. 1885-86: Revenue, Rs. 1,11,30,863. Expenditure, Rs. 1,30,26,036.

THE net amount of Indian sea and land customs revenue, excluding the salt revenue, for the first nine months of the current financial year has been Rs. 70,83,000 as compared with Rs. 70,56,000 during the corresponding period of last year.

THE indigo season is expected to close immediately, as only about 7,000 chests remain unsold.

A TRAGEDY is reported from Nassick. It seems that at a place called Chandor, where the collector, Mr. Woodward, was in camp, a constable ran amuck on the morning of the 17th inst. After killing his wife, father, and mother he went sword in hand to the Collector's camp. Though repeatedly told to throw down his weapon he refused, and advanced rapidly in a menacing manner, with it uplifted, upon the Collector, who, when he was about ten paces off, fired and killed him on the spot.

THE news from Upper Burma indicates a general collapse of the dacoit movement. Wuntho has been occupied without opposition by a force under General Cox. The Tsabwah, who had refused to come to terms, has fled northwards.

A SANITARIUM for the troops in Burma will be established at Gouk, sixteen miles from Sagadoun. It is 6,000 feet high, and easy of access.

THE reinforcement of Madras Infantry will be so timed as to arrive just when the troops in the relief are leaving. They will then be able to start directly up the Irrawaddy.

To meet the demand for medical officers in Burma, it has been decided that the order requiring medical officers to pass in the vernacular before being appointed to the medical charge of regiments shall be held temporarily in abeyance, to allow of the service of young surgeons who have recently arrived in the country being utilised at once.

It is notable that Mr. J. B. Lyall's appointment to the Lieutenant-Governorship of the Punjab completes the circuit of Etonians in high places in India. Not only are Sir Rivers Thompson and Sir Alfred Lyall old Etonians, but their successors designate, both of them, imbibed their education in the glade where Grateful Science, &c., &c. Hereafter, wherever the Government of India may be, at Calcutta or Simla, or midway between them, Viceroy, Commander-in-Chief, and Lieutenant-Governor will all be schoolfellows. It is time that some wisacre in the distant Presidencies was raising a cry about an Eton ring. But the coincidence is not likely to repeat itself, for Eton is not numerously represented in the Indian Services, and its numbers become less and less as we descend in the scale of official seniority.

Notes of the Week.

THE news from all India is still of Jubilee rejoicings in the shape of ceremonials and fireworks, but little definite appears to have been settled regarding any permanent memorial of the occasion. Not the most foolish of the suggestions which have been made is one to the effect that in certain stations which want them there should be placed public fountains and avenues of trees planted. Those who know the value of a cool spring in the desert, and of the shadow of a tree in the hot sunshine will be able to appreciate and approve of the idea.

THE High Priest of Baidyanath is very gushing in his loyalty, as will be seen from the Times' telegram to-day, in praying that Her Most Gracious Majesty may live to celebrate another Jubilee! But he takes advantage in blessing her Christian rule to curse that of the Mahomedans, which is scarcely judicious in a high priest of his order should the prayer of the Bengalis be heard that India might soon be handed over by England to Native rule. It would go hard, we fancy, upon that Jubilee occasion with the High Priest of Baidyanath.

It is said that quickly following upon the return of Sir Frederick Roberts to his headquarters in India a list will be prepared and forwarded home of recommendations for honours and promotion for those officers who have helped towards the pacification of Upper Burma. The list will probably be a long one, but nobody will grudge the workers their well-earned rewards. Every Burma campaign has been one of severe trial to officer and man, calling for the display of higher qualities than that of mere gallantry in the field. The test of the true soldier is not his behaviour on some bright day of battle, but the temper, endurance, and courage which he shows during a time when hard work, privations, and disease are what he has to meet with. These are enemies from whom no glory is to be won, but as England always expects every man to do his duty she ought to be quick to reward him when he does it excellently well.

BUT whilst the Burma rewards have had immediate consideration why have the claims of the Indian Contingent, which served and fought in the campaign of 1885, both in the Soudan and Egypt, been overlooked? The Khedive's Star was given to all the European troops in that campaign long ago, but although the 15th Sikhs and 28th Bombay Infantry were in every fight there was after their arrival, and did garrison duty during a hot weather in Suakin, it has been withheld from them. A correspondent, writing to a military contemporary, commenting upon this omission, says: "If the authorities could be brought to see the stupidity of what they are doing, or, rather, not doing, Jack Sepoy will be much more keen when next he is wanted in foreign service. Now, I know he has a feeling that he has been done." Sensibly and pertinently put.

THE Rangoon Times contrasts the style of the visits paid by Sir Frederick Roberts and Sir Charles Bernard respectively to the Burmese Archbishop. The former was escorted by 3 generals, 129 officers, and 2 troops of Lancers. When Sir Charles paid his visit he was dressed in a battered solah topee, a suit of some light material considerably the worse for wear, and carried a thick knob stick, presenting, it is hinted, the well-known appearance of the European loafer type in India. For escort he had with him a single follower equally shabbily-dressed. Our contemporary goes, perhaps, rather too far in saying that Sir Charles's simplicity of character and costume has been the cause of his inability to quiet the country, but there can be no doubt of the wisdom of certain pomp and display before a people in whose eyes these are held to signify power and position.

THE failure of the Simla Bank, which has had a prosperous career for nearly half-a-century, must have been a surprise to many old Anglo-Indians who have no connection now—but those of kindly memories—with India. It was started as a small concern about 1840 by a few retired officers and the late Mr. W. Hogan, the well-known and popular head of the Commander-in-Chief's Secretariat Office from the time of Sir Charles Napier to that of Lord Napier of Magdala. The bank grew and flourished, but younger rivals and later troubles came to it, and its closing was not altogether unexpected some months ago by the Indian public. Our latest advices are, however, to the effect that it is likely to be resuscitated, and that the losses will not be so heavy upon the shareholders (many of whom are retired officers and civilians in England) as might have been anticipated. It is said that there will be no losses in addition to those already arranged for.

THERE is nothing, if you are a London journalist, like being well posted up in Eastern manners and customs when writing of them. This will at once be apparent from the perusal of the story which is going the round of the Press that "The Ameer of Afghanistan, being about to make a royal progress through his territory, and having found the last one rather dull for want of congenial ladies' society, has determined this time to take a select few, say, a dozen, of his wives with him. The roads, however, in some parts of the country, are not practicable for carriages, so the Lights of the Harem are to ride. Now riding is not a common lady's accomplishment in Afghanistan, but a discreet English groom has been found to give lessons, and things are progressing favourably. Not only so, but habits and top-hats have been ordered from Calcutta that everything may be en règle." Readers who have been in Afghanistan, or who have learnt from travellers or books something of the habits of Afghan Ameer, will appreciate the genuineness of the picture.

A SUNDAY paper is responsible for the following. Se non è vero è ben trovato:—"Poor Adolphus Moore, C.B., so suddenly and so early cut off, is a great loss, both official and social; and nowhere will he be more lamented than at the Alpine Club, of which he was one of the most ardent members. He was very witty. An enthusiastic mountaineer, who had named a large family of children after various Alpine peaks, once told Moore his wife had presented him with twins, and he was in a difficulty. "Oh!" said Moore, simple enough; "you must call the boy Monty and the girl Rosa."

A BLUE BOOK of 248 pages, relating to Burma, recording events down to Jan. 13th, was issued with the Parliamentary papers on Friday. The record of military operations has been published from time to time. In a despatch dated Dec. 16th, to the Government of India, Lord Cross remarks that, as was foreseen, a period of disorder and straggling warfare had succeeded the military occupation of Mandalay, which had assumed dimensions somewhat, though not materially, exceeding what was anticipated. The same difficulties, it is pointed out, were encountered upon the annexation of Lower Burma, which were not fully and finally overcome for a period of eight years, although the country was generally pacified at the end of the third year. There was every reason to hope that the course of events would not be more unfavourable in Upper Burma.

IN his Reconnoitring Central Asia, Charles Marvin says of the local effect of the late General MacGregor's journey along the Turcoman frontier:—"It is not too much to say that if MacGregor and Baker had never put in an appearance on the frontier, Russia would have been spared a whole series of Turcoman campaigns. The visits of these officers cost Russia millions of money and hundreds of lives. This is an historical fact which has never been properly examined, and it is worth looking into for a few minutes, if for no other reason than showing what immense harm our Burnabys can do a rival Power. From 1873, until Skobelev took Geok Tepe, not a year passed without some English officer or other moving along the Turcoman frontier, from Sarakh to the Caspian. All these officers were strongly opposed to the Russian advance, and, although they never helped the Turcomans with money or weapons, they encouraged them, in their brave soldierly language, to fight on, in the hope that England would some day come and help them. Such language, held out year after year, could not but have the effect of buoying up the Turcomans, and causing them to fight with greater vigour. It is no exaggeration to say that the journeys of MacGregor, Baker, and other officers of the Burnaby stamp did more to arrest the Russian advance than all the solemn deliberations of English Cabinets, the sackfuls of diplomatic correspondence, the miles of Parliamentary speeches and questions, and the myriads of newspaper articles published between the capture of Khiva in 1873 and Skobelev's conquest of Geok Tepé in 1881."

INDIA.

CALCUTTA, FEB. 13.

The Queen's Jubilee is now the all-engrossing topic, and the whole country is resounding with the noise of preparation. Here in Calcutta the festivities will commence on Tuesday evening with a ball given by the Lieutenant-Governor. Wednesday's proceedings are to open by the firing at sunrise of a salute of 101 guns from the ramparts of Fort William, and the publication of a special Gazette with a long list of honours. At nine o'clock all the troops in garrison will be reviewed by the Viceroy. After the review Lord Dufferin, with his suite and the high officials, will drive to the Cathedral, where he will be received by the Bishop and his clergy, and a thanksgiving service will be held. In the afternoon the Viceroy and the high dignitaries will repair to a pavilion on the racecourse, where a number of deputations representing various associations and public bodies will be received and will present loyal addresses. A grand display of fireworks is to follow in the evening, and the day will close with a reception at Government House.

Thursday will be devoted to amusements of various kinds, entertainments to the school children, sailors, and others. In the evening the city will be illuminated. The Viceroy and his party will leave Government House at seven o'clock and drive through the principal streets, followed by the carriages of all persons who wish to join in the procession. The route marked out is about seven miles in length, and all along it preparations of the most elaborate nature are being made.

The festivities in the provincial towns will be similar to those of the capital, although, of course, on a similar scale. In all garrison towns there will be a salute and a parade on Wednesday morning. The clergy have been recommended to hold special services, and almost every town in India will have fireworks and illuminations on Wednesday or Thursday evening. The Natives are showing great enthusiasm; meetings have been held and committees formed in every district, and subscriptions are flowing in fast. Among other interesting matters, it may be mentioned that the high priest of Baidyanath, one of the most sacred Hindoo shrines of Lower Bengal, has issued an appeal exhorting Hindoos of all classes to give evidence of their loyalty in a befitting manner. This appeal, thousands of copies of which in Sanscrit and Bengales have been printed for circulation, runs thus:—

"May that great Empress under whose protection religious ceremonies have been practised without molestation for fifty years, may that august Empress, Victoria, live long! The lustre of her reign, which illumines the hollow vales of the wilderness and the concealed places, and which brightens the sight itself, has like a second sun made India blossom like the lotus, by dispelling the gloom of injustice originating from the severe tyranny of Mahomedanism. May the Empress Victoria, under whose kindness all her subjects have grown strong in the strength of religion and happiness, may she live a hundred years, with her sons and friends! May the Empress under whose influence uninterrupted peace reigns in India live long!

"It behoves you Aryans, one and all, to pray for long life for the Empress. May that Empress in whose Empire men of science sing with delight the manifold blessings of telegraphs, railways, and other inventions, may the Empress whose moonlike deeds spread a halo of light far and wide, may the Empress Victoria be victorious! This is my constant prayer to Shiva."

Last Sunday being an auspicious day, according to the Hindoo Calendar, was fixed as the beginning of the Jubilee celebration at Baidyanath. At noon the high priest, dressed in gorgeous robes, held a solemn service, and offered a prayer in which he besought God to prolong Her Majesty's life, so as to enable her to celebrate another Jubilee fifty years hence.

At the close of the public inquiry into the recent fatal fire at Madras the coroner summed up at some length, and the jury returned a verdict that the fire was the result of pure accident, that the fair committee had not made sufficient arrangements for the preventing or extinguishing of fire, that the placing of naked kerosine lamps in inflammable booths was very injudicious, that there was no fault to find with the gates for ingress and egress, that the charges against the police were wholly unfounded, that the existing arrangements for extinguishing fires in Madras were very unsatisfactory, that telephonic communication between the police-stations should be established, and that legislation was necessary for the purpose of investing some officers with full powers to look after the safety of the public in large assemblies.

The new railway bridge over the Hooghly is to be opened with great ceremony on the 21st inst. It has been suggested that in honour of the Jubilee it should be called the Victoria Bridge.

Mr. Crosthwaite, the newly-appointed Chief Commissioner in Burma, will visit Calcutta immediately to confer with the Viceroy, and will leave for Burma at the end of the month. He will be succeeded in the Central Provinces by Mr. Mackenzie, Home Secretary to the Indian Government, who is now on furlough, and his place on the Public Service Commission will be taken by Mr. Fitzpatrick, at present acting Chief Commissioner in the Central Provinces.

The Bonerwals on the frontier, who have been blockaded for some time as a punishment for various acts of contumacy during the last three years, have now made an unconditional submission, returned the arms taken when they sacked the village of Pirzai in May, 1884, and paid the fine imposed. The blockade will now be raised.

We regret that pressure on our space to-day prevents us from commenting upon the very interesting paper on "The Economical Condition of India," read by Dr. George Watt, C.I.E., before the Society for the Encouragement of Arts, Manufactures, and Commerce, on Friday evening last.

The present Nawab of Sacheen has, it is stated, resigned all the rights of his gadi and written to the Political Agent, Surat, to that effect.

It is not, perhaps, generally known that the Ameer of Kabul is the owner of a part of British India. Fifty-seven acres of land in Peshawur, for the cultivation of rice, as well as some shops for the storage of his almonds, already belong to the ruler of Afghanistan. The annexation was, however, carried out by the peaceable method of private purchase with the sanction of the Indian Government.

THE recent terrible fire at Tinnevely and at the Peoples's Park, Madras, has impressed upon the local Government the necessity of taking measures to prevent similar catastrophes in the future. It is a singular anomaly that while Governments in other parts of the world—in Europe, America and Australia—have had recourse to legislation to protect the community against fires and panics by vesting the control of theatrical and other public performances in the magistracy or the local municipal authorities, no Act having a similar purpose has been passed by the Indian Legislature. Experience teaches us that an ill-regulated panic is more productive of mischief than fire. An alarm of fire, even where no danger need be feared, has a remarkable effect in exciting the imagination of a crowd, and the people, by losing their presence of mind, create the very danger which they endeavour to avoid. In such conflagrations as those at the Madras People's Park, the pandal at Tinnevely, the Ring Theatre at Vienna, and the Coliseum in Liverpool, the loss of life was not so much the result of the action of the flames as the effect of an ungovernable fear with which the people were for the moment seized. An affrighted and panic-stricken crowd invariably struggles blindly to obtain an exit at the door, neglecting, as was the case at Tinnevely, other equally convenient means of egress. The importance, therefore, of having doors sufficiently wide to prevent any congestion that may be threatened by a sudden stampede, and of having that open outwards, becomes at once apparent. But a monstrously absurd and utterly foolish section in the Madras Municipalities Act—a section that should be immediately expunged or amended—requires that the doors of pandals and other places where large crowds assemble should open inwards. In accordance with the requirements of this section, the doors of the pandal of Tinnevely were made to open inwards; hence the enormous loss of life which occurred on the occasion of the fire there. At present the Madras District Municipalities Act gives no power to the Municipal Council to regulate and control theatrical and other public performances, but it is satisfactory to know that the local Government will take early steps to supply the omission. It is much to be regretted that the Act was not amended before the mischief was done. During the forthcoming Jubilee celebrations, fairs and kindred fêtes will be held in various parts of the country. It behoves the local authorities, therefore, to guard against a repetition of the Madras calamities by erecting pandals and shamianas in open places, where the risks of an accidental outbreak of fire will be comparatively small, and by providing abundant means of egress.

ANGLO-INDIAN PRESS.

TROUBLES IN JAMNAGAR.

(Bombay Gazette.)

Complaints of disorder and oppression which deserve attention come from the State of Jamnagar. A memorial signed by over a thousand Hindu inhabitants of Khambalia in that State has been sent to Mr. Lakshmidas Khimjee, a well known resident of Bombay who hails from Jamnagar, and his countrymen request him to make known their grievances and solicit the benevolent intervention of the Bombay Government. The State is ruled by his Highness the Jam, who, being of advanced age and in infirm health, entrusts the administration to the Dewan Maganbhai. This Minister is not himself apparently obnoxious to the memorialists, but it is alleged that he is remiss in allowing other influences to work harm in the State, and that he fails to secure redress for outrages which are committed. The bulk of the population is composed of Hindus, and the number of Mussulmans is inconsiderable; but it is alleged that the latter community have recently been permitted to insult and injure the Hindus, who find it impossible to get justice when they appeal against the lawless acts of which they complain. A certain Rewa Khawas, Controller of Customs, and a personal attendant on the Chief, is an influential man at Court, where other Mussulman influences are said to prevail to an extent which is regrettable; and the Hindu community connect this state of things at the Court with the grievances, of which they set out the list at considerable length. It is alleged that on one occasion an unprovoked attack had been made upon several Hindus, who were wounded with swords. The injured men preferred a complaint to the authorities, and it is asserted that the Dewan and some other officials informed them that they must withdraw their complaints, which if carried further might "injure the State interest." Three specific cases are mentioned in which threats are said to have been made to induce compliance with the order to withdraw the charges. Other cases are thus stated:—"They threatened Bhatia Lalji Meghji, whose wounds were much advanced, and who had no hopes of living except he was saved by God, and the two sons of the goldsmith Madan Meghraj were also called and threatened, to withdraw their complaint, but in reply they said that they would not do so as they were dying, but if they should live they would not carry on their complaint; for this the officers tried much and held out many threats." The names of two Mahajans are given, to whom, it is stated, the Dewan and his colleagues frankly admitted they were obliged to act as they did from motives of political prudence: "Look here! You know already that nowadays Mussalms hold great influence in the Jamnagar State; so if you go further you will not be successful in your cause; we enjoin you in this case, you act as we suggest." As an aggravation of all this, it is mentioned that Khavas Raghavbhai, who accompanied the Dewan in the mission, went off to a meeting of the "guilty persons—i.e., Mahomedans," who entertained him with the essence of rose, milk sweetened with sugar-candy, boiled coffee and opium dissolved in water; not only this, but "Khavas Raghavbhai gave twenty korees for every Tajia to Mahomedans, and assisted them in many other ways." To make matters worse, Mussalms and their official guest threw yellow-coloured water over one another, and "Khavas was drenched with the same coloured water." And then, "having brought the above said matter to such a crisis, the said Raghavbhai left that place for Nagar." The memorialists consider that the offenders, who ought to have received due punishment, were thus given the countenance of authority, and they opine that "there will be no wonder if offences are increased day by day by such treatment." They are indignant that none of the offenders have been arrested by any of the local officers, although orders were issued to have them arrested. The answer of the local authorities was that they would see about it on receipt of another order, and that perhaps some other officer might be sent down by the Jamsahab, who would make inquiries into the matter. There is the more reason to be surprised at all this because the Dewan, it is naively said, is considered to be of refined views. "What; does he ignore the laws?" they ask, "or is the Jamsahab displeased with his poor Hindu subjects, or does he not want them?" The Mussalms, it is asserted, use the arms which they are allowed to possess to fire at and intimidate the Hindus, and no notice is taken when such cases occur. A number of instances are given to show that this allegation is well-founded. Thus a Loowana merchant, fifty-five years of age, named Thakoor Kurji Nowji, returning from Khambalia after transacting business "was robbed of his money and horse, and was himself beaten with weapons, and was levelled to the ground" half a mile outside the gate of the city. This poor merchant's dying declaration was that he was beaten and robbed by men in the service of a Mahomedan Jemadar. "It is a matter of great regret," says the memorial, "that the said Loowana, after making this statement, died at 4 P.M. to-day, and has reached heaven." The honest Mahajans would perhaps have expressed greater regret had the luckless man of business reached the other place. The measure of the offences charged against the "predominating influence" in the administration of the State's affairs is filled up by the slaughter of "dumb animals," cows and likewise of kids, which are generally put to death in places adjacent to Hindu temples, and in the midst of Hindus who are going to or returning from places of worship. Gangs of outlaws, it is asserted, oppress the villagers, and no redress is forthcoming. In fine, "great zoolum is exercised on Hindu subjects and no one is at an ease," for the Mahomedans have at present great influence in the State of Jam, where they are strongly supported, it is boldly declared, by backstairs influence at Court. We do not pretend to vouch for the strict accuracy of these allegations, but when we find them supported by the signatures of some twelve hundred residents in the State, who give their names in proof of their good faith, we deem it our duty to call the attention of the Government and the public to complaints preferred with so much circumstance of time and place. A little inquiry will do no harm, and may do much good in that remote and interesting Native State, which contributes a very fair quota of useful men to the busy world of Bombay.

CELEBRATION OF THE QUEEN'S JUBILEE AT BANGALORE.

(Madras Times.)

A meeting, comprising some of the Municipal Commissioners of the Civil and Military station of Bangalore, was held recently with the object of selecting from among the Commissioners gentlemen who will have to wait on Mr. J. B. Lyall, the British Resident, for the purpose of fully discussing the form the Jubilee to be celebrated in Bangalore, in common with other places, will take. To this end the undermentioned gentlemen were proposed to attend at the Residency:—Messrs. Campbell and Smith in the interests of the European and Eurasian community, Ral Bahadur B. Krishna Singh in the interest of the Hindoos, and Khan Bahadur Aga Abdoola in the interests of the Mahomedan community. The sense of the meeting was rather divided: some were of opinion that a fountain in a public place would befittingly mark the auspicious event, while others held that a public library named after Her Most Gracious Majesty, for all castes and creeds, would admirably answer the purpose. It is also believed that a public meeting of the citizens of the Civil and Military station will shortly be held at the Mayo Hall, under the presidency of Mr. J. B. Lyall, for the purpose of raising subscriptions towards the inauguration of the Jubilee.

Mr. Lyall has addressed the following letter to Mr. Hewetson, the President of the Municipality:—

"My Dear Hewetson,—The Government of India has fixed the 16th February as the day on which the Jubilee of Her Majesty the Queen-Empress is to be celebrated throughout India, and Mr. Lyall has desired me to address you in your dual capacity as District Magistrate and President of the Municipal Commissioners for Bangalore, in order that some well-considered arrangements for the celebration of this important and joyful event in a becoming and satisfactory manner may be devised at an early date. It is, I am to say, very desirable that all classes of the population should have an opportunity afforded them of exhibiting their sentiments of homage and devotion to Her Most Gracious Majesty, as well as of participating in the rejoicings which all her loyal subjects in India would naturally wish to indulge in on the auspicious day chosen to commemorate the fiftieth year of her beneficent reign. The Resident is assured that the Municipal Commissioners of the Civil and Military Station will be ready and anxious to assist in rendering the Jubilee in Bangalore a complete success, and it has occurred to him that the most satisfactory method of arranging for this, and for ascertaining beforehand the wishes of the population, would be for you, as President, to convene a Jubilee meeting in the Mayo Hall, at which, if desired, the Resident would take the chair, on either Saturday the 22nd Jan., or the Monday following. Before, however, this general meeting is held it will, I am to suggest, be convenient were you and a sub-committee, composed of three or four influential and representative members of the municipal Commission, to meet Mr. Lyall at the Residency on Wednesday or Thursday next, and to prepare a rough programme of the day's amusements, which might be submitted subsequently as a basis of discussion at the general meeting in the Mayo Hall. Will you kindly lay this important matter before the Commissioners at the earliest possible date, as, in view of the extensive preparations which may be necessary, the time for discussion is short."

WHAT THEY ARE DOING IN BOMBAY.

At a recent meeting of the Bombay Town Council it was proposed by the chairman, Mr. Dosabhoj Framjee, and seconded by Mr. Nanabhoj Byramjee Jeejeebhoy, "That the Corporation be recommended to sanction the expenditure, from surplus cash balance, of one lakh of rupees towards the cost of commemorating the Jubilee of the reign of Her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen-Empress." The proposition was carried by acclamation. The Council also resolved, on the motion of Surgeon-Major Waters, that, in their opinion, it is desirable that the Rajabai Clock Tower should continue to be illuminated; and they requested the Municipal Commissioner to address Government with a view to ascertain what steps it is intended to take for reilluminating the clock.

THE PRINCE OF WALES AND THE JUBILEE.

A report has been presented by the Committee appointed by the Prince of Wales to frame a scheme for an Imperial Institute in commemoration of the Queen's Jubilee. It recommends that there should be a Colonial and Indian section to illustrate the commercial and industrial resources of the Colonies and India, and a United Kingdom section to exhibit the development and present condition of the natural and manufactured products of the United Kingdom, and afford such knowledge as will lead to a still further development. The Committee also recommend that a new body, entirely independent of any existing organisation, should be created for the government of the Institute, and that the site should be at South Kensington.

THE CONFLICT BETWEEN EASTERN AND WESTERN CIVILIZATION.

(Bombay Gazette.)

According to Dr. Gustave le Bon, author of a great work just published in France on the "Civilisations of India," Europe has good reason to fear a terrible war of revenge threatening her from the East. For many centuries Europe and Asia have been engaged in a war of continent against continent, in which on the whole Asia has had decidedly the worst of it. But now Marathon, Salamis, Arbela, Lepanto, Plassey, and many other Oriental defeats are to be terribly avenged. The inhabitants of India and China are to retaliate with tremendous effect on the conquerors who had the temerity to rouse them from their sleep of centuries, and to turn to their own advantage the law that might is right. But their great victories are not to be won by iron and gunpowder. Dr. Gustave le Bon feels perfectly confident that for many centuries in India even independence will be an utter impossibility, and he certainly does not anticipate that Chinese ironclads will ever land Oriental armies to effect conquests on the shores of the English Channel or Mediterranean. The war of revenge will be a titanic industrial struggle. With the evolution of modern industry the instruments of warfare must necessarily change. Soon the market places will be the only fields of battle. Apparently less destructive than those which were formerly the theatre of human struggles, they will nevertheless be much more formidable. Under the guidance of electricity and steam mankind is about to enter upon an iron age, in which the struggle for existence will be too terrible to leave any room for pity. "Although the two worlds have already several times faced each other in battle, the real struggle is only beginning. The Saracens repulsed from France and Spain, and then attacked in the heart of their own empire by the gigantic adventure of the crusades; the conquests of India by England; the overthrow of the impenetrable barriers of China at the cannon's mouth are episodes in a war that has raged for centuries. But these episodes have only been mere skirmishes when compared with the tremendous conflict that the new conditions of existence, in which modern science has placed the world, must necessarily produce." In this struggle the Asiatic is the predestined victor, and the European is doomed to suffer inevitable defeat. Dr. Gustave le Bon comes to this conclusion on the ground that the low wages prevailing in the East must enable Asiatic manufacturers and agriculturists to undersell their European competitors in all markets, now that steam and improved communications have brought the two worlds together. Europe is already beginning to suffer from the conflict. At present it is only agriculturists who are feeling the baneful effects of Eastern competition. Many French farmers have been plunged into despair and misery by the importation of cheap Indian corn produced by the labour of peasants who are content to work in the fields for two annas a day. But this competition will soon, unless Dr. le Bon is mistaken, extend to all industries. "The miner who is accustomed to spend from five to six francs a day, and who threatens to overturn the social edifice because he does not earn more than three or four francs, will soon see manufacturers asking China, which will then be open for coal extracted from the earth by men who think themselves rich when their daily wages amount to five or six sous. The workman who engages in strikes to raise his wages will no longer find work for his hands to do, because this same coal will support in the Far East manufactories provided with all our machines, worked by men glad to gain wages twenty times lower than other wages of Europeans. Between two groups of men, the one like the Orientals whose wants are satisfied with daily wages of from four to five sous, the other like the Westerners who require almost twenty times as much to satisfy their wants, competition is impossible, and the inevitable result is that the latter will be condemned one day to content themselves with the miserable wages of the former."

This, then, is the gloomy prospect which an eminent French sociologist anticipates for Europe generally and the working classes in particular. The workmen of the West are, he thinks, doomed in themselves or in their descendants to see wages reduced all over the world till they approach the Indian or Chinese scale. Similar apprehensions have been felt in a somewhat different form by American and Colonial statesmen who have devoted their attention to what is called the yellow question. It is owing to the fear of Chinese labour driving white labour out of the field that so much opposition has been shown to Chinese immigration in Western America and Australia. This fear of being ruined by Chinese cheap labour has sometimes been so strong as to occasion severe riots. Chinese immigration, however, can be effectually stopped by legislation, but no legislation can possibly prevent the products of cheap Oriental labour from appearing in the markets of the West, as long as the manufactures of Europe are exported to Asia. It is no doubt true that the annihilation of distance by steam does tend to enable Chinese and Indian labourers to compete with European labour without the necessity of their emigrating and settling among the countries of the West. But can this competition produce the effects so disastrous from a European point of view that Dr. le Bon anticipates? We think that even his own words show that the gloomy prospect he depicts is at any rate very distant. If the populous nations of Asia are going to begin to engage in all kinds of manufactures, they will have in the first place to supply themselves on a very extensive scale with iron machinery, in the supplying of which an immense amount of well-paid work will be thrown upon the hands of European workmen. In such a case the agriculturists of Europe would suffer, as the European machinery would be bought by Asiatic corn, the increased importation of which certainly tends to diminish the value of agricultural produce in Europe, and may perhaps narrow the limit of productive cultivation and throw agricultural labourers out of employment. But this state of affairs, though making European agriculture less profitable, will afford plenty of work in manufactories for the agricultural labourers thrown temporarily out of employment; so that the working classes taken as a whole may in Europe derive great benefit from the industrial energy of the East in the immediate future, except in those European countries which are exclusively agricultural. Into the more distant future we do not care to follow the telescopic predictions of sociology. We content ourselves with expressing our conviction that there must be a fallacy somewhere in the deductions by which Dr. le Bon strives to prove that in the future French and British workmen will be condemned to live on very much less than sixpence a day. In the cold climates of the north such a result is really impossible. The standard of the necessities of life has been fixed for the labouring classes in Europe for many centuries, and cannot be so immensely altered. The British workman will be content to work for the wages prevalent in India and China, when he can live on vegetables, forego his pot of beer, and discard shirt and trousers for a dhoti. And that will be never.

RADICALISM IN INDIA.

(Times of India.)

The Rajah Oday Pertap Singh has contributed to the Calcutta Review an article that is worth general consideration from the public and especial attention from the members of the Public Service Commission. He speaks as one of the Indian aristocracy, and as representing all the influential but silent classes who have a stake in the country. His theme is "The Growth of Radicalism in India and its Danger." He begins by dividing the people into five classes—the ruling princes and chiefs, the aristocracy, the middle classes, the teeming millions, and finally, "those so eloquently described by Lord Macaulay in one of his letters to his sister, as being determined to make themselves what they call gentlemen, and thus over-running us by lawyers without briefs, physicians without patients, authors without readers, clerks soliciting employment who might have thriven and been above the world as bakers, watchmakers, or innkeepers." Which of these classes is then inclined to favour the growth of Radicalism in India? The ruling princes require little more than a scrupulous regard on the part of the "ruling power for their oriental sentiments and prejudices." The aristocracy, such as the old taluqdars of Oudh, and the Indian nobility generally, are still, he maintains, the hereditary leaders of the people, and this class is as a whole, "quite contented under the British rule and yields to none in point of loyalty. The noble is so situated, that his selfish motives do not stand as obstacles in the way of judging the shortcomings of Government. He understands the difficulties which lie in the path of a Government ruling over a foreign country. In spite of these difficulties he knows too well that India cannot expect a better Government than the present. He firmly believes that as long as England retains King or Queen as head of her own Government, there is no fear for his existence." In a word the Indian nobility, like the Indian princes, are content with the present régime. The third class, successful professional men, tradesmen, Government and private servants, have their own affairs to attend to, and have neither the time nor the inclination to "agitate" against the Government. The "teeming millions" are now much more prosperous than ever they were before, and very much more contented. Their thoughts are bounded by their domestic hearths, and they need, we are told, "nothing so much as complete rest, to recover from years of misrule and anarchy in days gone by." All the would-be patriots are to be found in the Rajah's fifth class, who, though they are recruited chiefly from the lower ranks, imagine that they can govern India better than the British. It is so seldom that a Native of position can be induced to speak out, that our readers will, we are sure, be glad to hear the Rajah Oday Pertap Singh on a subject which he has so evidently taken to heart.

These so-called Indian Radicals wish, he says, "to monopolise all the civil posts under Government with the exception of those of Viceroy Governors and few others, to have the members of the Legislative Council appointed by election, to have no British soldiers in the Indian army, to have it reduced to one-fourth of its present strength, to have the whole male population of India armed, to obtain tickets of invitation whenever any European whom they happen to know gives a dinner or ball, and last, though not least, to read the funeral service over the Native aristocracy, and over every man who is rich and happens to possess land." And for this he blames the present system of education. "A system of education without the religious, practical, moral and physical elements cannot fail to take shape in a train of false ideas of independence and liberty, the fountain source from which Indian Radicalism forces an outlet." The whole attention of the State has been directed towards the education of the lower classes. The aristocracy, except the Rajkumar Colleges for the sons of Princes, have been neglected. At all events, no special provision has been made for them, and they will not send their sons to the high schools and colleges. They may be wrong in their intense Conservatism, but they will not abandon it. "I put it," says the Rajah, "to Sir Alfred Lyall (who recently appealed to the Indian aristocracy on this very subject), or to any other English gentleman whether he would be willing to see his own son sitting at school between the sons of his menial servants. No gentleman in any country in the world would accept this position for his children." But he personally believes in the advantages of a liberal education, and his article itself shows that he contrived to achieve it. The Indian aristocracy are wealthy enough to pay for the education of their sons. They do not require Government aid financially. But they are not accustomed to act for themselves, and they can do nothing unless Government takes the initiative. "It is," says the Rajah, "high time that the Indian administrators should turn their attention to the intellectual development of the sons of the Rajahs and Chiefs, and give up the notion that the more they are educated, the more obstacles they will throw in the way of Government. Let the Indian officials combine with the aristocracy of the land and beware of our indigenous Parnellites, who in return for any countenance that may be shown them, will repay the former only by additional troubles in administration, and the latter by portioning out their land and other property to the masses on the system of three acres and a cow." Here we have given as briefly as possible, a resumé of the Rajah's arguments. They are noteworthy as coming from a Native gentleman of position, and the editor of the Calcutta Review has very properly given them the place of honour in his periodical. They need no comment, and indeed they stand out most forcibly without it. The only question our readers have to consider is as to whether the Rajah Oday Pertap Singh is a good representative of the men of his class, and as to whether he can be accepted as their spokesman.

LORD DUFFERIN'S ADMINISTRATION.

(Bombay Gazette.)

An occasional correspondent of the Times sends to that journal from Bombay a review of the two years' government of the present Viceroy, with some comments upon "the present somewhat critical condition of Indian politics." The review is impartial and candid, its candour going so far as a confession that somehow or other Lord Dufferin's popularity has been lately on the wane, and that the Government of India has a little drifted out of touch and sympathy with the people. But as a faithful historian the writer is equally bound to show that, whether popular or not, the Viceroy has done his best to redeem the promise which he made on landing in Bombay twenty-five months ago that he would labour hard and unceasingly in the path of duty. Nothing could be more true than his preliminary remark than two more harassing years have seldom fallen to the lot of a Governor-General than the two years that have passed since that promise was given. We can scarcely include in the more trying problems with which he has had to deal the Bengal Tenancy Bill, though the writer gives prominence to it, and seems to see in the Viceroy's treatment of it a manifestation of the courage of a born administrator. It would be better to regard it as an instance of the modesty which befits a new comer. Lord Dufferin found on the table of the Legislative Council a Bill upon a subject with which he claimed to have no personal acquaintance; he knew that it had been thoroughly discussed in Council and in Committee, and he had the good sense and the courage to decide against the reopening of the controversy, urgently though he was asked to reopen it by the Zemindars and their spokesmen. The brief reference which is made to the settlement of old land disputes in Oudh would have been more suggestive if it had been added that the policy of the Government in Oudh has been distinctly in the direction of securing the rights of the occupying classes. There, as in Bengal, there has been nothing in the agrarian policy of Lord Dufferin's Government to account for the decrease in his popularity which the Bombay correspondent of the Times report. A policy which safeguards the interests of the cultivators against the wealthy Talukdars and Zemindars may be, as some of the objectors have declared, confiscatory, but it is hard to see how it can have contributed to putting the Government out of touch and sympathy with the people. But the "millions" are often spoken of as "dumb," and they make small contribution to what is spoken of as public opinion, which no one will be surprised to find the Times describing as "the public opinion of a class whose aims and interests are not by any means identical with those of the great masses of the Indian population for whom we have to care." The Times is never too gracious in expressing its mind concerning the people who give vent to what they call the voice of India; but it only utters a truism when it thus warns its readers at home against assuming that public opinion in India, and in England mean precisely the same thing. Perhaps if we could get a less restricted utterance of popular sentiment we should find that the conscious discontent of the people with Lord Dufferin's policy is not so widespread as the unnamed but easily-suspected Bombay writer declares it to be.

The Viceroy's difficulties bulk largely in any record that may be made by his brief tenure of office in India. No competent critic of his administration would care to press hard the contention that any of them were self-imposed. Neither on the north-west frontier nor in Burma would the utmost caution on the part of the Government of India have warded them off. It suits people in India who speak in the phrases of democracy to denounce the measures which have been taken to strengthen the frontier as wasteful and unnecessary. How much truth there may be in the allegation it is not necessary now to ask. We ourselves have spoken freely enough upon the subject, and have never been able to accept the large and costly augmentation of the British army in India as either politic or imperative. The strengthening of fortifications and the opening up of strategic railways and military roads upon the frontier have always seemed to us to reduce the necessity for a large increase in the army. But it may be as well to remember that the autocratic Government of India was not more prodigal in the expenditure which it undertook in the panic of 1885 than the Government in England, which was closely in touch with public sentiment, and certainly incurred no unpopularity when it suddenly spent eleven millions sterling in order to persuade Russia that Penjdeh must for the present serve as the "thus far and no further" of her ambition. Looked at as a stroke of foreign policy Lord Dufferin's management of the crisis will stand all the examination that unfriendly critics can bestow upon it. If he has also taken a leaf here and there from the book of the "forward" frontier school, he has also taken the very title page of Sir John Lawrence's book. Lawrence himself had not a greater faith in the necessity of having a strong, friendly, and independent Afghanistan beyond our borders, and Lord Dufferin may fairly claim that at no time has an Ameer been more friendly to the British Power than Abdur Rahman, and at no time has his country shown more of the tokens of strength and consolidation. The Times writer has little more to say in regard to the Burmese war than has been said over and over again in these columns. He fails, it is true, to indicate one source of the difficulties that the Government have to contend with—their limitation of the objects of the original expedition to the deposition and arrest of Theebaw, without provision for the future of the country. But he does justice, upon the lines that we have more than once followed of late, to the urgent desire of the Government of India to place the most ample resources, military and political, at the disposal of the local authorities. Whoever was deceived by the apparent tranquillity of the country in the weeks succeeding the deposition of Theebaw, the Viceroy was not. The authorities on the spot never asked for assistance, and met with a refusal. The Viceroy's Government were importunate in pressing help upon them, and it may be accepted as strictly true that the resources that have been at the disposal of the authorities in Burma for nearly a year past, if somewhat short of the estimate that the Government had formed of the necessities of the case, have been, at least, as much in excess of local estimates. It is necessary to say this less for the enlightenment of Indian than of English opinion. Native criticism of the annexation has not troubled itself with this special aspect of the question any more than it has concerned itself with these international considerations which made intervention of some kind absolutely necessary unless Upper Burma were shortly to be brought within the Asiatic Colonial system of the French Republic. Native opinion upon the question, indeed, has been more denunciatory than critical, and in declaring against annexation in any circumstances it has made the elucidation of some of its more important phases a work of supererogation.

Time enough has elapsed since the deposition of Theebaw to falsify the anticipations that were freely indulged in a year ago as to the disquieting influence that the act would have upon the Princes of India. They have had the good sense to see that there was no true solidarity of interest either between themselves and the deposed King of Burma. The writer in the Times does justice to them and to the Viceroy when he observes that in no part of his administration have Lord Dufferin's special powers been of greater service than in the management of the Native Princes.

The touch of sympathy which he has imparted to his relations with them has had all the effect which it might be expected to have upon Oriental rulers. Their susceptibilities have been in no instance wounded, their amour propre has been effectively appealed to, and the glowing eulogies which the Viceroy has passed upon the more conspicuously deserving amongst them has impressed them as the cold justice of a less sympathetic ruler could never have done. We will not attempt to estimate the relative value of the approval of a princely class, ruling over fifty millions of subjects, and of that of the classes who speak through the disaffected vernacular Press. But it is at all events a factor worth taking into account by those who, a little too soon it seems to us, have concluded that the Viceroy and his Government are getting out of touch with the populations entrusted to their charge. It may be quite true that Lord Dufferin has to pay somewhat in popularity of a certain sort for refusing to be in a hurry. Any reasonable statesman confronted with unreasonable demands must offend some one. But wisdom is, in the long run, justified of her children, even of those in high places. The lesson that the progress of India, like that of England herself, has been, must be gradual, is not acceptable to restless minds, and whoever, by act or precept, endeavours to impart it must reckon upon incurring a certain amount of displeasure. But the liberal movement in India is not essentially unreasonable as it seems to be to the Times, and it is not beyond hope that those who are disappointed at the slowness with which their aspirations are being realised may learn ere long how much their own extravagance has to do with it.

BURMA.

(Rangoon Gazette.)

It is a satisfactory sign of returning prosperity for Burma that the railway earnings are rapidly increasing. For some four years the receipts of the Prome Railway have practically stood still, neither increasing nor decreasing. Meanwhile the Tounghoo Railway has since its opening earned more and progressed more rapidly than anyone expected. In the year 1885 the two lines made gross earnings of about 21 lakhs; in 1886 the gross earnings have been about 26½ lakhs. The estimate for this year reckons on gross earnings of about 29 lakhs, and working expenses of about 17 lakhs. If the year turns out well the railway authorities have every confidence that they will do better than the estimate. Even under the figures of the estimate the two lines will pay the full four per cent. interest on the total capital. This is a most satisfactory result when we remember that the Tounghoo line was opened only eighteen months ago; and it is a happy augury for the fulfilment of the Chief Commissioner's prediction that the extended Burma railways will pay their way and return a good dividend within five years of the line being opened to Mandalay.

We learn that Mr. Guilford Molesworth, the very experienced consulting engineer to the Government of India, after travelling over the whole of the proposed line from Tounghoo to Mandalay, has expressed himself as both surprised and satisfied at the easiness of the line for railway works, and at the rich promise of commercial success which the country affords. He predicts a splendid future for the Mandalay railway. He urges that the bank and other works should be begun at once throughout the whole length, and he reports that, if energetic effort be made, the line ought to open through to Mandalay by July, 1888. The opening would have to be made over wooden temporary bridges, which will have to be put up in any case. The iron bridges and other permanent structures would be completed afterwards at leisure. We understand that work had been going on rapidly, according to the previous programme, on sections 1, 2, 7, and 8—that is to say, from Tounghoo to Ningyan, and from Mandalay to the Panlang river. The Government of India have agreed to Mr. Molesworth's proposals, and work will now begin on the four central sections, where the survey parties are still at work. The Local Government, some months ago, named the 1st of April, 1889, as the earliest date on which the line could be opened through; that would be two years and four months after the first sod was turned. If now the engineers can carry out Mr. Molesworth's programme, and can open the whole line to Mandalay, about 240 miles long, by July, 1888, they will do well, much better than railway engineers have done in India hitherto on any line, Guaranteed or State, of equal length. We trust that no effort will be spared by any of the officials concerned in pressing on this important work as rapidly as possible. But we would urge on the Government the importance of providing surveying and working parties with adequate guards, so that surveyors, engineers and workpeople may be protected from injury by dacoits or rebels. A few months ago dacoits were swarming all along the line. Matters are much better now. But the evil might break out again. It will be a great discouragement to rapid progress and a serious discredit to the Government if any of the engineers or their workmen get cut up by rebels. We regard the Mandalay railway as far and away the most important work now on hand in Upper Burma; and we consider that every other undertaking should, if necessary, be subordinated to the prompt, careful, and vigilant prosecution of this great work.

"LAYS OF LANKA":—"THE BUFFALO TURNS THE TABLES."

(Ceylon Observer.)

In this Isle where the thief gets well-homed and well-fed,
And gets taken great care of for priggish,
And a red-handed murderer often as not Gets away with a caution and wiggling;
And where judges declare you can witnesses get
For a few little pieces of metal,
A Magistrate, not long ago, had a case
Of a trespassing buff'lo to settle.
The Court was all full when the case was begun—
Appuhamy v. Carolis Banda—
The buff'lo concerned was tied up by a rope
To a post of the Court-house verandah.
A long list of witnesses came on each side,
And the case got a little confusing;
When the Magistrate, seeking for light, I suppose,
Little thinking 'twould be so amusing,
After patiently hearing both sides of the case,
Asked to see the poor buff. in dispute;
So the bobbies went out and untying the rope,
To the door of the Court brought the brute.
With a sly vicious glance in his mischievous eyes,
The buff'lo gazed round for a minute,
In which time he appeared to have gathered the gist
Of the Court, and of all that was in it.
For he lowered his head, gave a snort, and his tail
Lashed his flanks in most rage-rousing fashion.
Then into that Court like a thunder-bolt loosed
He dashed in a terrible passion.
"Each man for himself!" was the cry, or, at least,
Would have been, if to cry they'd been able.
Policemen and witnesses scrambled upon,
The Interpreter under the table,
A horn through the tail of one's coat is, I fear,
Detrimental to forward progression,
And the Proctor, when next the buff. tossed up his head,
Appeared destined to quit his profession;
But as good luck would have it the coat tails gave way
And the Proctor dropped safe on the floor.
Though stout, 'twould have made e'en a harlequin stare
To have seen how he got through the door.
"Take the animal out!" said the Magistrate, safe
And secure on his seat elevated.
Next moment, I fear that the buffalo's horns
At his desk, on his nerves must have grated,
But finding the Magistrate well out of reach
(The hue of whose face I won't mention)
He stood for a second as if thinking, and then
To the table he paid his attention.
Like a spiritualistic professor he turned
That table; but not round and round,
But so that the legs p. into up to the roof,
And the top rested nearer the ground.
Policemen, ink, law-books, Interpreter, pens
And witnesses lay. What a shindy Began! How those bobbies and witnesses rolled
And tumbled through door and through "windy"
Defies my small powers of description to tell;
So I beg you to picture the mêlée.
I don't really know how all made their escape
Without one getting pounded to jelly.
The buff'lo one longing look cast at the judge
And then stamped on the whole Penal Code
This done, from the Court he went slowly, and then Disappeared round the bend of the road.

INDIA'S TEACHING.

(Pioneer.)

Mild and loving, gentle Native,
Kindly to all things that breathe,
Whose religion with thy daily
Work has mingled creeds that wreath
Round the life of cobra, lizard,
Insect, squirrel, vulture, crow,
Hallowed shadows of the Godhead,
Full of love of long ago!
Such I found thee in the Poet's
And Historian's broader page,
In the stories of tradition,
Preacher's sermon, tales of age,
Told to wide-eyed youth, who wondered
That a race with bloodshed smeared,
With its toiling millions, abject
'Neath a foreign rule appeared,
Bent the willing back and turning
To the smiter still the cheek,
Ruled with kindness dumb brutes round them,
Kindliness of weak to weak.
* * *

Such the Hindu ere I knew him,
 In this sultry land of Ind
 Newly lauded, forth I wandered Full of kindness for my kind :
 Saw each shuffling Asiatic
 Through a glamour of mine own ;
 Loved him for his love to others,
 For his hourly kindness shown
 To his toiling bullocks, to his Ewe-necked goats, his dog, his tat—
 (Much I wondered that the creatures Were so thin in spite of that),
 Grinding poverty, want and abject
 Squalor of a trodden race
 Circumscribed his kindly wishes,
 Doubtless ; and I sought to trace Signs of sadly sweet communion
 'Tween the Hindu and his beast,
 Saying to myself that always
 He gives most who has the least.

* * * * *
 Then I watched the ponderous bunnia
 Straddled on his starveling brute ;
 Watched the dhobie's tiny donkey's
 Quivering limb and swollen foot ;
 Saw the bullock-driver driving,
 Twisted tail in either hand ;
 Saw the pariah dog with ribs like
 Furrows in a stony land ;
 Saw the thin girl-widow beaten ;
 Saw the woman bear the load
 Shuffling weak behind her husband,
 Striding down the dusty road.

* * * * *
 So twelve months passed. Slow forgetting
 All the tales I had been told
 Of the kindness of the Indian
 To his brutes, my heart grew cold
 To the bestial cruelty round me ;
 Grew too hard to greatly feel
 For the luckless turkey, slowly
 Murdered for my Xmas meal ;
 For the sore backed, raw ribbed ponies
 In my ticca-garri tied ;
 For the bullocks at my draw well,
 Cutting yoke and festerfng hide :
 Twelve long months of daily listening
 To the hundred million cries
 Of God's helpless tortured creatures
 Had exposed the ancient lies
 That they told of Hindu kindness,
 And had played a worser part—
 Made me deaf to nature's suffering,
 Dull of ear and hard of heart.

THE QUEEN'S JUBILEE IN INDIA.

BENGAL.

A LETTER from the Government of India on the subject of the celebration has been circulated to all Commissioners of Divisions in Bengal with the following enclosing letter from the Hon. Mr. Colman Macaulay, Secretary to the local Government:—Sir, I am directed to forward to you the enclosed copy of a circular letter from the Government of India designating Wednesday, 16th of February, as the day for the celebration of Her Majesty's Jubilee throughout India. I am desired by the Lieut.-Governor to request you to send a copy of this letter to all public bodies within your jurisdiction, and to communicate to them the assurance expressed by his Excellency in Council that they will not fail to take steps to celebrate worthily the completion of fifty years of the benevolent reign of our illustrious Sovereign. Sir Rivers Thompson shares this confidence and believes that the inhabitants of Bengal will not be backward among the subjects of the Empire in displaying their reverence for the public and private virtues which have made Her Majesty's name a bright word in history, and an object of affection and veneration among the lowliest of her people.

THE Trades Association, Calcutta, have resolved, at an extraordinary general meeting, to promote an every way measure for ensuring the Jubilee being fittingly kept in Calcutta. The members will illuminate their premises and the Association present an address to the Viceroy.

MADRAS.

OWING to the tact displayed by the Governor the dissension as to the date of celebrating the Queen's Jubilee has ceased, and the result has been that the Governor presided at a large meeting of all classes, convened to appoint a committee and take other steps towards immediate action in the matter.

SIR MADAVA RAO proposed that a subscription list be opened. Mr. Eardley Norton, seconded by Mr. George Arbuthnot, proposed the formation of a committee, and appealed on behalf of the Imperial Institute for a donation, which should, he said, be made out of the local funds.

MR. BOYSON, of Messrs. Binny and Co., seconded by H.H. the Maharajah of Vizianagram, proposed a vote of thanks to the Sheriff and the Governor. The Chief Justice seconded this proposition, and alluded to the golden opinions formed of the latter by all classes. The Governor, in reply, said he accepted this meeting as a good omen with regard to the future.

THE Sheriff announced his intention to build a "Victoria" ward for one of the local hospitals, and to feed the school children ; he also stated that Rajah Gajapatti Row, of Vizagapatam, would present a bronze statue of the Queen to the city.

BOMBAY.

A GOVERNMENT Resolution has been issued embodying a letter from the Governor, stating that the Government had considered carefully how best to associate themselves with the Jubilee Celebration, and had come to the conclusion that the most pressing want of the people of the Bombay Presidency was a technical institute. The Government believed that a "Victoria Technical Institute," managed by a board composed of three representatives of the Government, two of the Municipal Corporation, two of the Ripon Fund, one of the Port Trust, one of the Chamber of Commerce, one of the Sassoon Institute and one of the Jamsetjee Trustees, would best answer the object. The Resolution adds that the Governor in Council was prepared to grant Rs. 25,000 annually on approval of the programme ; and, to make an immediate beginning possible, was ready, under certain conditions, to lend a greater part of Parel Government House to the new institution. The Government trusts that the co-operation of all classes of the community may eventually lead to the extension of the movement, which cannot be started simultaneously in many places, owing to the scant resources at the disposal of the Government. The Corporation are to be requested to assign to the institute the Rs. 80,000 they have sanctioned for a permanent memorial.

NATIVE STATES.

PREPARATIONS for the Jubilee are in full swing at Hyderabad. The Nizam has determined to found a Zenana Hospital for the better class of purdah women in the name of the Queen-Empress as a lasting memorial of the Jubilee. The city will be illuminated, and there will be big dinners at the palace and the Residency. The Minister has sent out orders to the Commissioners to arrange for the proper celebration of the day in their different divisions.

SIR GANPATRAO has decided to celebrate Her Majesty's Jubilee and to demonstrate the staunch loyalty of the Gwalior durbar by giving a grand entertainment to all British officers. There will be a display of fireworks and grand illuminations throughout the State. A review of Scindia's forces will be held and imperial salutes will be fired. Sir Ganpatrao will send a congratulatory telegram to the Gracious Sovereign on the 15th February through the Agent to the Governor-General and H.E. the Viceroy.

RANGOON.

At a meeting of the Rangoon Jubilee Committee it was resolved unanimously that two separate subscriptions be raised, one to be collected in Rangoon and expended in the celebration in Rangoon of the Jubilee on the 16th of February, the other to be collected throughout the province and devoted to a permanent national memorial for the whole of Burma, the precise form of national memorial to be determined after consultation with the representatives of all parts and all nationalities of the united provinces of Upper and Lower Burma. The Rangoon festivities will take the form of sports, illuminations, &c., for which Rs. 3,000 was subscribed in the room.

A good advertisement of the conical Enfield bullet is incidentally afforded in a recent number of the Indian Medical Journal. The writer describes three complicated operations which he performed upon soldiers who were wounded in 1877 in a skirmish with Afridis. The three men had been shot, through the thigh, knee, and ankle, respectively, by a single bullet, which was discovered wedged among the ankle bones of the last man, and scarcely altered from its original shape. After this kind of experience, says a contemporary, one can almost believe the narrative of the marksman in the Pall Mall Gazette. He was firing at a target when two owls flew by ; both birds were killed by the bullet, which also cut off the tail of a cow feeding across the line of fire, and finally scored a bull's-eye. If it had gone through the target and killed the marker, the score would have been a really fine one.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

OUR OWN POMPEII.*

"London Society," that vague, shadowy, indefinite invention of modern times—wearied of the monotony of the season determined upon a new pleasure. A Club was to be formed, housed upon the shores of the Mediterranean; the beauty of the edifice was to be a reflex of the beauty of the scene. This earthly Paradise was to be built according to classical ideas "without a too slavish following of the original." People were to be select; life was to be a dreamy existence amidst daily pleasures, health, comfort, happiness; these were to be the charms of "our own Pompeii."

So our unknown author transplants the crème de la crème of London to the second Athens of his imagination. There is Lady Marlowe, "an extremely enterprising member of Society," who was wont to boast that you met more nice people at her house than in any other drawing-room in London; there is Mr. Smythe, the organiser of the needs and requirements of life in high places, a miserable sycophant upon whom scorn is wasted and contempt misplaced; there are Mr. and Mrs. Leo, the latter of whom would set the world right if only the latter would take her advice—a line of business in which she was ably seconded by Miss Rattletul, the most veritable of blue stockings; there is an American lady, rejoicing in the name of Miss Van Knut, whose peculiarities shock the propriety of the matrons who hail from sober England; there is Claud Brownlow, a pervert to Conservatism; Mr. Cade, a revolutionist; Mr. Giles, inventor of the "Caucus," and wire-puller to the Liberal party. The sayings, the doings, of these motley crew of diverse individualities afford the author wide scope, of which he has freely and successfully availed himself, for caricaturing the follies and peculiarities of mankind in high life, while the vagaries of the political world, with its topsy-turvy policy of Home Rule, bring down withering sarcasm upon the heads of those statesmen and diplomatists who prefer party to honesty and place to uprightness—men whose consciences are as elastic as their principles are unsettled, "items" whom to know is to despise, traitors to their country, their queen, and themselves.

The work is cleverly written; it is severe in its criticism and merciless in its exposures of the foibles and follies of poor fallen humanity; but it is eminently readable, and few, at any rate, amongst those of Conservative proclivities but will appreciate the sarcastic reflections or the tergiversations of the despicable flaccid time-servers who float the flag of expediency and fall down before the Mammon of self-advancement.

SKETCHES OF SOME DISTINGUISHED ANGLO-INDIANS.†

Colonel Laurie's enlargement of his "Distinguished Anglo-Indians" has added considerably to the value of the original work, but there is still room for improvement. Some of the memoirs are far too short, others should not, in our opinion, have found a place at all amidst the distinguished rôle of Anglo-Indians whose names shed lustre on the annals of fame. The author has a chatty, familiar style, which has much to commend it as regards a task of the nature under consideration, but at times he is too discursive, and apt to wander into matters but remotely connected with the subject in hand. What, for instance, has Pollock's funeral to do with Sir Henry Lawrence's career? By-the-bye, too, does not the venerable Field-Marshal who revenged the massacre at Cabul deserve more than a cutting from the Broad Arrow? In a volume, however, of this nature it is always easy to pick holes, and admitting that in a few respects there is somewhat which might with advantage be amended, there is, on the other hand, a vast deal more which is alike interesting and instructive. Colonel Laurie has evidently expended a deal of care in the preparation of his olla podrida, and he has given the public some excellent memoirs; facile princeps, that of Sir Henry Rawlinson, which alone would rescue the work from oblivion; and if in other cases the information be meagre and the events uninteresting, skipping is allowable in a compilation which does not and cannot lay claim to harmony of detail or sequence of events.

SOME ESSAYS OF ELIA.‡

The "Essays of Elia" stand absolutely by themselves in the domain of literature; there is nothing which resembles them. Quaint yet simple, thoughtful yet artless, amusing yet instructive, they are unapproached, unapproachable. The present selection has been made chiefly with the view to illustration, and it is no small praise to state these latter are in every way fit companions to the text which they serve to elucidate. Perhaps the best known of Charles Lamb's Essays is that wherein the origin of roast sucking-pig is revealed to an astonished world;

* "Our own Pompeii." A Romance of To-morrow. (Blackwood and Sons.)

† "Sketches of Some Distinguished Anglo-Indians," by Colonel W. F. B. Laurie. (W. H. Allen and Co.)

the grotesque peculiarity of the tale, its comical logic, its laughter-producing dissertations, are familiar to every one who has learned to appreciate genuine humour and unrivalled fun. But not a few thoughtful readers will be more apt to enter into the spirit which prompted "Elia" to plead for the pleasures of childhood, the attractions of old scenes and quaint customs; many, too, will appreciate the "hungering after humanity" which led the clerk in Leadenhall-street to extend the hand of fellowship to the street arab, the beggar, and the outcast—which could find pleasure and happiness in the feast of sweeps on sausages—which derived fun and enjoyment even out of that scourge of domesticity, "the poor relation." Aye, a genial, loving heart must have beat in the bosom of Charles Lamb as he jotted down the observations of the hour, or the reflections of the moment. If, too, real genuine humour be required, what could be more delightful than "the reminiscences of Jude Judkins, Esq.," who lost a wife owing to his remissness in procuring a bag of oranges when, in the time of "billing and cooing," the happy pair betook themselves to the theatre—of course in company; for in those days the indiscriminate wanderings of modern love-making had not become fashionable. Even humble life had then its proprieties.

But enough. To those who have read the "Essays of Elia" we say, read them again. To those who are not familiar with these exquisite "uniques" we also say, read them, and find a new pleasure.

WALFORD'S ANTIQUARIAN.*

This is an interesting number, and quite up to the level of its predecessors. An article, all too brief, on the Defence of England in the sixteenth century, may, at the present time, when wars and rumours of wars admonish us to make the dear "right little island" also "tight," will attract attention. Our forefathers realised, as no one seems to do nowadays, what subjugation, the inevitable result of unpreparedness for defence, meant; and, like the Romans,

Spared neither land nor gold,
Nor son nor wife, nor limb nor life
In the brave days of old to avert so irreparable a calamity.

"Then," in truth, "none was for a party,
Then all were for the State."

May we, their descendants, not show ourselves avis peiores, but take warning "while it is called to-day;" and sink, ere it be too late, all political animosities in a stern resolution to defend the integrity of our Empire against insidious, as against open, attack!

The rare antiquarian treasures which have, by his marriage with Miss Lampson, come into the hands of so worthy a possessor as Mr. Frederic Locker, form the subject of an appreciative paper by Mr. R. H. Shepherd, which well merits perusal; the brief notices of the mysterious Rosicrucians, and of the visitation (preliminary to spoliation) of the monasteries in the reign of Henry VIII., are also interesting.

This Magazine continues to avoid the danger, to which periodicals of this character so often succumb, of becoming literary dustcart for miscellaneous unimportant matter, relating, however remotely, to the subject to which they ostensibly devote themselves; and to have done this successfully for so many years argues no common editorial ability on the part of Mr. Walford.

BOOKS FOR REVIEW.—"The Rise of the British Power in the East," by the late Hon. Mountstuart Elphinstone, edited by Sir Edward Colebrooke, Bart. (John Murray); "Walford's Antiquarian" (George Redway).

THE Syndicate of the Punjab University has had to consider the arrangements to be made for carrying on the duties of Principal of the Oriental College. The Senate of the University College, in 1872, sanctioned a salary of Rs. 400 a month; and Mr. Palmer Boyd came out from England to hold the post. On his death Dr. Leitner acted for a time as unpaid Superintendent; and afterwards as paid Superintendent, drawing at first Rs. 400 and afterwards Rs. 500 a-year. When he left the College last year the pay of the Principal was reduced to Rs. 100, and was afterwards raised to Rs. 200 a month; and for some little time past this salary has been drawn by Mr. T. C. Lewis, Principal of the Government College, who has been superintending the Oriental College, in addition to his other duties. It was proposed, at one time, to appoint a Native savant, as Principal; but as no eligible candidate offered himself for the post, and as no European Orientalist would give his whole time to the work for so small a sum, it is now considered best to maintain the existing arrangements for the present.

STATION LIFE IN INDIA.

A WRITER in the latest number of the Calcutta Review has drawn a picture by way of contrast between the conditions under which European society met, lived, and exercised hospitality towards each other twenty years ago, and the conditions which obtain to-day at an Indian station. One side of the picture—that which represents

 "Our Station" in the past—is drawn in bright lights; the other, that which is said to present it as it appears at present, is painted in deep shadows. The paper is signed "Esmé," and aims to give the reader the impression that it is from a pen of a Civilian of the old school, mourning over "the good old times." But that mourning over days that are no more has been a characteristic of certain human beings probably since the days of Adam, who had certainly better reasons for his regrets than could be shown by any of his posterity up to now. It may perhaps savour too much of optimism to hold that the world is getting better and brighter as time moves on, but it is a more sensible belief than the pessimism which pretends to regret that there is any movement at all. We should be sorry to think that English gentlemen and their wives stationed in India to-day are less genial in their natures, less gentle in their manners, and less generous in their hospitality than they were twenty years ago. But here is one side of the picture, which presents the writer of the article as arriving for the first time at his Station
 "Rainypur, the headquarters of the Swampy Gunge district," in Lower Bengal:—

Journeys were not so easily accomplished in those days as they are now, and we were not sorry when our palkees were put down in the verandah of the Circuit House. Friendly voices greeted us at once, and we were taken possession of, refreshed, all our creature comforts attended to, and everything provided that could make us comfortable. Within a few days we knew everyone in the station. The hospitality we received was unbounded.
 Everything was done to make time pass pleasantly and to provide sufficient entertainment and amusement for the European residents to keep them from sinking into the dull, monotonous, do-nothing state that characterises most Bengal stations of the present time. Our Burra Sahib and his wife did their duty to their neighbours in the regular old Indian style. They took the lead in everything—got up races, gave dances, dinners, picnics, and entertained the whole station as well as the neighbouring planters. Inspecting Officers were not left to the tender mercies of Circuit House chowkedar.

The further delights of this Indian paradise are then dwelt upon, but in twenty years all this was changed:—

"A jolly place," said he, "in times of old!
 But something ails it now: the spot is cursed."

"Our Station as it is" has now no reason to be proud of its sociability or liveliness. From the Judge downwards everyone is now trying only how to spend the least money, and displaying want of tact, exclusiveness, and pride of place. And the Judge, too, has lost his manners, for he has told the Commissioner's wife, who has a brother an indigo planter and a daughter married to a tea planter, that the former class were a set of unscrupulous rascals, and the latter a coarse, rowdy set, and further declined to meet a gentleman whose mother-in-law was an Eurasian.
 Here is the present picture of the place and the people—the Eastern paradise of twenty years ago:—

Poor Rainypur! The racecourse is overgrown with grass and jungle; the racket court is deserted; the residents live apart from each other, because there is nothing to bring them together; they take a drive every evening, dine in their own houses, and go to sleep afterwards with the regularity of the Cutcherry clock.
 The sociable and hospitable planters now only visit the station when obliged to do so upon business, and then have to stay at the Dak bungalow. Well might we advertise for a "man who loves his fellow-men" to come and take the lead and drag us out of this slough of despond, but I am afraid that there are many Rainypurs in India now.

If there, be the change has certainly been remarkable in so short a time, for twenty years is no great period to speak of, even in the changing society of an Indian station. If there be less hospitality now than formerly, the writer, who is laudator temporis acti se puero, might have found some excuse for the economy he condemns, in the present value of the rupee. Whatever benefit the fall in silver may be bringing to the Indian wheat grower or exporter the currency disputants may hold their own opinions upon, but there can be no two opinions regarding its result upon the English official who has to remit money from India here. If he has sought to lessen his expenses in the "station," and thereby dispense with many of the social ceremonies and amusements which helped once to lighten the burden of the Indian day, and make the Indian night less long, it is better to believe that he does so from the necessity forced upon him by circumstances rather than from any change of character or selfishness of disposition. The sad reflection, however, remains that a state of things which renders official life in India a struggle and a self-sacrifice will surely make Indian service unpopular with Englishmen who have hitherto been attracted towards it, and this will be a loss of prestige and of power which the Government should hasten to prevent.

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL COWPER has been appointed to officiate as Controller of Military Accounts, Bombay.

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL POLE CAREW, Military Secretary to the Commander-in-Chief, goes on six months leave in April. Major Ian Hamilton will officiate during his absence.

COLONEL H. P. HAWKER, Deputy Commissary-General, Madras will act for Colonel Hunt as Commissary-General-in-Chief in India when the latter takes furlough.

It is notified for general information that all soldiers of the Native army may, after three years' service, be allowed to claim their discharge in time of peace, if the regiment is within ten per cent. of its establishment.

GUNNER JOHN RICHARDSON, 5-1 North Irish Division, R.A., was charged recently in Bombay with having used disloyal words ("To — with the Queen") regarding the Queen when being marched to the hospital as a prisoner for medical inspection. He was sentenced to imprisonment for one year.

MAJOR ELLES, of the Quartermaster-General's Department, and Secretary of the Mobilisation Committee, is now in Calcutta, where various details connected with army mobilisation in India are being marked out, as the result of the deliberations of the sub-committees which assembled in Simla last summer.

COLONEL H. P. HAWKES, M.S.C., the popular Commissary-General, Madras, has been appointed Commissary-General of the Army in India, and will leave Madras in March for Calcutta and Simla. He joined the Department in 1864, and became Deputy-Commissary-General, Madras, in 1883, and Commissary-General in the present month. His excellent services in connection with the frontier preparations of last year, and with the Burma Expedition, as well as with the Indian and Colonial Exhibition of London, have been cordially acknowledged by the Madras Government, and by the Government of India.

THE Jubilee, the Pioneer believes, is likely to be remarkable for a liberal distribution of honours among Native officers of the Indian army—a class who in return for good service to the State get rather scanty rewards. In this connection a scheme of military colonisation may very probably be tried in Upper Burma, deserving Native officers and pensioned sepoys being offered jagirs on condition of maintaining local peace. There are thousands of acres of good land lying uncultivated owing to the paucity of the Burmese population, so that no difficulty would be felt in apportioning jagirs, and the scheme would undoubtedly be popular with the Native army.

THE Pioneer says:—"As questions have been addressed to us inquiring whether the station alluded to the other day as under notice for the excellence of its shooting is in Bengal, and furthermore whether the suspicion has arisen over the late meetings of the new Presidency Rifle Association, we may at once answer—No. The station that was referred to is Bangalore, and the matches in case those of the Western India Rifle Association. It may be added that the investigation instituted appears to leave no question that fraud was at work. There seems to be proof that the scores were manufactured and that the penknife has been used on the canvas targets to produce bull's eyes to correspond with the number recorded on the registers. If this is established, it may be trusted that no false delicacy will be shown in the matter by the Council of the Western India Rifle Association, and that the names of the culprits will be published. Mere disqualification of scores in a case of this kind is totally inadequate. A charge of cheating might be sustained in a court of justice, and an example or two would act usefully as a deterrent to blacklegs who trade on rifle competitions. The want of confidence engendered by these cases of false scoring strikes at the very root of simultaneous match shooting, and may do great harm to the cause which the army authorities are wisely doing their utmost to promote.

SIR CHARLES ARBUTHNOT'S arrival in Burma will, the Pioneer says, cause no material change in military arrangements there. He will assume command of the whole troops in Upper and Lower Burma, just as Sir Herbert Macpherson did, while General White will retain his position at Mandalay. When the relief has been carried out in March it will probably be found possible to reduce the six brigades to four, thus giving each Brigadier about four thousand men. If by March there are still signs of disturbance, or should a renewal of outbreaks take place as the troops move away in relief, some extra Native infantry regiments may be sent from India; but in any case the relief as ordered will be carried out. The troops comprised in it have suffered so severely from hardships undergone in a malarious climate that they must be brought away, whatever other arrangements may have to be made.

THE 16th Regiment Madras Infantry has, says the Madras Mail, been having a bad time of it—since its departure from Vizianagram. It was sent over to Burma in the middle of the south-west monsoon, spent thirteen days in boats on the Sitang river, and immediately on its arrival at Ningyan was split up into numerous small detachments to garrison unhealthy posts, where the water was bad, and neither meat nor vegetables could be had for love or money. As soon as the men got too sick to be able to defend their posts they were replaced by healthy men, who in their turns became invalids. During the four and a half months the regiment has been in Burma one officer has been killed, one severely wounded, and one invalided. Of the Native ranks five have been killed and thirty-five have died of disease, forty have been invalided to Rangoon, and there are nearly 150 men now sick. The incessant convoy duty along muddy roads in the wet months was most harassing to the men.

Miscellaneous.

H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT has accepted the District Grand Mastership of Bombay. Mr. Tyrrell Leith, who has hitherto been the Grand Master of the Masonic Body in Bombay, has placed his resignation in the hands of his brethren, amongst whom he has so long been primus inter pares. He takes with him into his retirement the regard and esteem of the numerous and charitable body over which he has so ably presided. Mr. Tyrrell Leith's resignation was voluntarily offered to enable the body to enjoy the pleasure of unanimously electing H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught to the position.

THE Calcutta papers describe a very curious scare now agitating the poorer classes of the Native community of that city. They believe that the Sirkar has issued a secret order that any Native found in the streets after nine at night shall be put to death with horrible circumstances. The scare is compared to the recent gullakatta panic among the Ganges boatmen, who thought that the Supreme Government were collecting a pile of Native heads as a foundation for the Benares Bridge. Both stories are equally unintelligible, and would be ridiculous but for the light they throw on the dangers of what Mr. John Morley called the "hidden mass of excitable barbarism" in India. The Native Press of Calcutta, instead of adopting ready-made Mr. John Morley's usual Radical platitudes, would do well to pay some attention to the real danger to which he surprised his admirers by drawing attention. At present it is left to the Anglo-Indian papers which the poorer Natives never read, to point out the ridiculous nature of these scares. The Native Press, which does reach the lower classes, concerns itself rather with magnifying imaginary acts of oppression, girding at rival sects, or airily contradicting itself over Imperial topics.

THE consecration of the Lahore Cathedral took place on January 25, the service being conducted by the Bishop of Lahore, who also delivered the opening address. A large body of the Clergy of the Province arrived by the morning's train and took part in the service, joining in the processions which preceded the handing over to the Bishop of the instrument of donation, and the dedication of the communion table. During the early part of the service, which lasted three hours, the building was filled to overflowing, many having to stand.

THE building, including the furniture, has cost a little over four lakhs, and the debt on the building fund is now £300. The towers and interior decorations have, however, yet to be finished, and a peal of bells and a new organ are contemplated. The original estimate for everything was six lakhs. The Cathedral building is handsome and imposing, and a great accession to Lahore. The foundation-stone was laid in February, 1874.

FROM KARACHI TO ENGLAND.—The Manager of the North-Western Railway has arranged with one of the leading steamship companies to book through passengers, parcels, and goods between England and India via Karachi. The plan of the through booking system is as follows:—The station masters on the principal stations of the North-Western Railway will be provided with plans of the steamers plying, which will be at the disposal of and for the inspection of the public who, on selecting a berth and paying the fare, can obtain a through ticket from the Punjab either to Liverpool direct or to London via Marseilles. The journey to Karachi can be done by the daily ordinary trains, or, if preferred, by special trains running in conjunction with the steamers. This latter means saves hotel and other expenses, and changing of carriages at Sukkur. The special trains run alongside of the steamers, where even the rupee may be changed into sterling at the current exchange of the day. At present the steamers will start monthly.

THE PUNJAB CHIEF COURT.—The Lahore paper says:—"A despatch has been received from the Secretary of State for India, dealing with the subject of privilege leave for Judges of the Chief Court. The Secretary of State lays down the principle that the Judges, in this respect, should be placed on the same footing as Judges of High Courts, and should only be allowed privilege leave when it can be granted without having to appoint a locum tenens. The facetiousness of the despatch turns, of course, on the implied idea that a Judge of the Chief Court, being one among so many, and having so little work to do, can go off on promiscuous holidays without being missed, either by his colleagues or by the public. As a matter of fact, the numerical weakness of the Court and the press of work—a large proportion of which is of necessity in arrears—has absolutely precluded any such arrangement as that now ordered. It has been found impossible for a Judge to go on short leave without his place being filled up; and the new rule, in practice, means that the Chief Court is to have no privilege leave at all. As the Judges, unlike their brethren in High Courts, get no vacation, their case is rather a hard one.

THE BRUTALITY OF DACOITS.—A correspondent of the Rangoon Times says:—"The late dacoity at the village near Pyuntaza was marked by diabolical acts which seldom accompany dacoities, even by Burmese. They poured kerosine oil down the principal houseowner's throat and set fire to it, and on his showing where he hid about Rs. 1,000 and some jewellery, they killed him because it was not enough; they then covered his wife's clothes with oil, and set fire to them with the object of making her disclose other hiding places; but as she could not do so, they left her to her fate, which was for the fire to burn out and leave her yet alive, and she was afterwards taken to the Pyuntaza Hospital.

THE Times of India says:—"The Export Trade of India is known to be expanded by the depreciation of the exchange value of the rupee, and it is often remarked by mercantile men that this depreciation is really beneficial to the country, forgetful of the fact of the rapid opening up of means of communication by the construction of railways. We have often pointed out that to reach the truth of the matter a differential method of investigation must be pursued by which the expansion due to improved communications and the general progress of the country may be contrasted with the total result. As bearing on this subject no less than from its own inherent importance is the Report of the Internal trade of the Punjab interesting. The Punjab is favourably situated for an inquiry into the condition of trade. Yet so extended is its frontier that it is no easy matter to register the necessary statistics. Certain alterations have been made during the year in the method of registering the trade. The nine "blocks" have been increased to thirteen, chiefly by the division of the "Southern block" into six parts, now to be called Bombay, Central Provinces, Berar, Madras, Mysore, and the Nizam's Territory. It has been suggested that the work of registration should be restricted to as few audit offices as possible, and the Financial Commissioner has made certain proposals which if accepted are likely to facilitate the registration of railway-borne traffic, and to avoid the duplication of work and the inaccuracy of returns which result from the statements of exports and imports being independently compiled on different railways. These proposals contemplate that each railway should furnish returns of imports only, and there can be no doubt that if such a system were introduced a considerable advance would be made towards securing greater accuracy as well as more prompt publication of returns. Coming now to the trade itself, the statistics show that there has been a very considerable increase both in the amount and value. Under the heading rail-borne trade the increase has been from Rs. 8,39,81,050 in 1885 to Rs. 9,12,78,802 in 1886 for imports, and from Rs. 6,71,91,050 to Rs. 7,69,66,636 for exports. The increase will be more apparent and the statistics possessing more instructive value if we compare the figures for the last four years. Leaving out for convenience the five last significant figures we get the following result:—Imports in 1882-83, Rs. 7,09; 7,45 in the following year; and then 8,39, and 9,12, as above; exports, Rs. 3,73 for 1882-83, 4,58 for the following year, and 6,71 and 7,69 as above. In four years, it would appear, the total exports by rail from the Punjab have become doubled. The principal causes of this great development are said to be "the extension of the railway system and the lowering of the rates of freight charged by the various railway companies." And mention is made of the improvements effected in Kurrachee harbour by which trade is attracted to the Indus Valley State Railway. A somewhat similar tale is told of the river-borne trade; and the number of boats on the Indus engaged in the traffic is said to have increased from 1,524 to 1,927. It is added that "the value of foreign trade with countries external to India has varied but little during the past three years." From these considerations it would seem that the opening up of the country is resulting in very tangible increase of trade, and that the internal trade ought to be steadily borne in mind in all generalisations made during the discussion on the burning question of the currency."

On December the 31st were interred in the cemetery at Umballa, with military honours, the remains of Lieut.-Colonel Robert Cony Whiting, Bengal Staff Corps, retired, who died at Nahun on December 29th, after a long and painful illness, in his 62nd year. Colonel Whiting entered the service of the East India Company in 1844 as ensign in the old 70th Native Infantry, and was present at the battles of Chillianwala and Gujrat (at the latter of which he was severely wounded), and was awarded the Punjab war medal with two clasps. He then served in the China War with the same regiment, which, after the mutiny, by change of designation, had become the 11th Bengal Native Infantry, and obtained the war medal and clasp. He also served with the same corps in the Bhootan Campaign, and obtained the Indian Frontier medal and clasp for this service. He retired as lieutenant-colonel about fourteen years ago, and took service with his Highness the Rajah of Sirmoor as commandant of his troops which he brought into a high state of efficiency, and accompanied them in the Afghan Campaign as far as the Kuram Valley, his command forming a portion of the Native Prince's Contingent. For this service he obtained the Afghan war medal, and was also presented by Government with a sword of honour. He died deeply regretted by his many relatives, connections and friends, by the Native prince under whom he had served, and the soldiers he had commanded for so many years, a body of whom accompanied his remains from Nahun, and laid him with their own hands in his grave.

THE following document, which was recently received by a European gentleman, should have its place in "The Complete Letter Writer":—Honoured Sir,—We beg to bring to your kind notice the following facts which are quite genuine, i.e., your Secretary Mr.—Esquire comes to the mills when he is quite intoxicated, totally, daily, and not only that he strikes the works-peoples with that heavy ponderous stick that he was wont to carry always with him, therefore the works-peoples are always fearing him and are quite disheartened to work while he stays over the works peoples. Me and my friend was forced to leave your Honour's service owing to his maltreatment, and moreover his vulgar language that he uses to us is something degrading and obnoxious to the human ears. We would not care much for his abusive language, but for his great partiality for liquor and dealing sundry blows with his stick. He almost killed one man with the same stick by dealing at him sundry blows, the victim's eye was bleeding blood severely, and Mr.—Esquire beholding the fatality of the inflicted blows he gave the victim he gave Rupees six (6) to the victim to compensate for the atrocious deed he had committed. While he is in the intoxicated still he sits in his chair with his eyes rolling wildly in his head, and when we, your Honour's servants, was sent for by him we can hardly dare to enter his office, because we are fearing very much for that most ponderous stick. We sincerely hopes your Honours will kindly look into these matters, and have pity on us poor suffering clerks. —We oeg to remain, Sir, yours, &c.,—POOR SUFFERING CLERKS.

THE services of Mr. Baber and Mr. Warry, of the British Consular Service in China, have been placed at the disposal of Sir Charles Bernard, through the Government of India, for duty at Bhamo or elsewhere on the North-Eastern Frontier of Burma, as the Chief Commissioner may think desirable. Mr. Baber has had exceptional experience in China, and has made a study of the politics of the South-Eastern Provinces, so that he is peculiarly fitted to deal with matters connected with our occupation of Northern Burma on the confines of Yunnan. He is a man of approved ability, and quite recently was sent on a special mission to the Korean Peninsula, the affairs of which have received marked attention at the hands of the English Government during the past year or two. He is, we regret to hear, suffering from illness at present, but on recovery will proceed from China to Burma. Mr. Warry was told off to accompany Mr. Macaulay's Mission to Tibet, and is now in Calcutta. He is well acquainted with the Chinese language and with the habits of the people, so that he should be more than equal to the special work which he will have to do on the Burmo-Chinese border.

THE COMPANY'S EXTRACTS are manufactured on a new principle, which yields products of the very best quality.

"Normal" Food Extract is superior to most, if not all, other Meat Extracts, owing to its richness in stimulating and restorative properties. It contains, as shown by analysis, less ash and water, and more substances soluble in alcohol, and more nitrogenous compounds than the best known Extracts.

"The foregoing twelve sketches only appeared in the Original Edition.

There is also an Account of Anglo-Indian Periodical Literature, and a brief Sketch of Sporting Literature in India, in which many well-known and distinguished
Anglo-Indians are mentioned.

The object of the above work (originally published in 1875) is to give, in a convenient form, sketches of some of the distinguished men who have materially assisted in building up the fabric of our great Indian Empire.
The London Press bestowed a considerable amount of praise on the former little volume, the Standard remarking that it should have been twice the size; while the Friend of India said that "every Anglo-Indian should read" what a London journal styled "a deeply interesting volume."

* The sketches have now been more than doubled.

LONDON: W. H. ALLEN & CO., 13, WATERLOO PLACE.

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

A MAGAZINE THAT GIVES EXPRESSION

TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF THE PEOPLE OF
INDIA.

There are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing MONTHLY (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth;
but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

THE CALCUTTA REVIEW.

(The only Quarterly Review in India.)

ESTABLISHED 1844.

OPINIONS.

The Calcutta Review for October reached us a day or two ago, and a glance at its contents shows that the number more than sustains the reputation which this old and favourite publication is again achieving. The Review is rapidly regaining the position which it . . .
 there is no fear of the Indian Review, or the Asiatic Quarterly rivalling it in public favour.—Statesman,
 October, 1886.

. . . The best service which I ever rendered in India,
 or, indeed, for India, was the establishment, single-handed, of the Calcutta Review, which has done far more for Indian literature than anything I have written under my own name.—J. W. KATE, Athenæum Club, June 23, 1872.

The Calcutta Review has given us valuable articles on the army. Some from the pen of Sir Henry Lawrence, who wrote with the spirit of prophecy, of the coming storm of which he was one of the noblest victims.—
 Address of the C.-in-C. at the U.S. Inst. of India.

. . . The Calcutta Review has not only throughout its career reflected the highest honour on its public-spirited promoters and its well-known distinguished contributors, but has done much to help forward the reconstruction of our system of governing India.—Westminster

General Intelligence.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 4th February; from Allahabad and Madras to the 2nd February; and from Calcutta to the 1st February.

THE news by Overland Mail is chiefly concerning preparations for the Jubilee celebrations, particulars of which, having come by wire, will be found in our summary of latest telegrams.

THE Government of India in the Financial Department has addressed the Local Governments on the necessity of using all their efforts to collect the revenues falling due within the year.

THERE was an intention of holding a Legislative Session at Lahore for the two important Punjab Land Bills which were introduced last season at Simla, but this idea has been abandoned, as the Punjab authorities consider a single sitting will be sufficient to pass the bills in question.

A THOUSAND men are to be raised in the Bombay Presidency for service in the Burma police. The men will be recruited, it is understood, as follows:—400 from the Deccan and Concan, 400 from Central India and Guzerat, and 200 from Sind. Out of the 3,000 recruits required in Upper India, 1,800 have been already secured, and men are coming in steadily.

GOVERNMENT have sanctioned the formation of standing camps in the hills at Dalhousie, Chakrata, and Rauikhet, during the ensuing hot weather, similar to those of last year.

SIR FREDERICK ROBERTS starts for Peshawar, Kohat, the Derajat, the Bori Valley, Peshin and Quetta, the second week in March.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE has sanctioned the estimate, amounting to Rs. 27,22,940, of the cost of constructing an extension of the Sind-Pishin State Railway from Quetta to the Kotal at the top of the Bolan Pass.

INSTRUCTIONS have been given for the preparation of estimates of the cost of doubling the present narrow gauge line on the Rajputana-Malwa Railway.

LORD REAY has signified to the Governor-General of Goa his intention to visit Goa shortly, and preparations are being made in the Viceregal palace in Pangim to give a fitting reception to his Excellency.

AT the annual meeting of the Bombay Chamber of Commerce the Hon. Forbes Adam, the chairman, gave a very satisfactory account of the prospects of the present year, the crops being everywhere abundant and the public health good.

THE Government has given its consent to the arming of the Bombay Mounted Volunteers with swords instead of sword-bayonets. Henceforward the corps will be known as the Bombay Light Horse.

A MOVEMENT is on foot in Bombay for the establishment of an Institute for Young Women on the lines of the Young Men's Christian Association.

AT a meeting of the Bombay Presidency Association the other evening, to decide as to the disposal of the Rs. 5,000 constituting the Fawcett Memorial Fund, only six gentlemen attended. No decision was taken.

THE Bombay High Court has enhanced the fine of Rs. 15 inflicted on Captain Hughes, of the Dublin Fusiliers, at Poona, for an assault on two Parsee gentlemen, to Rs. 50.

It is now reported that Mr. Girdlestone, Resident in Nepal, will succeed Mr. J. B. Lyall, for whom he lately officiated as Resident at Mysore.

SNOW fell at Katmandu and on the low hills in the neighbourhood on the night of the 20th instant, which is a very unusual occurrence. The weather is very severe.

THE Public Service Commission having completed its inquiry in Bombay has proceeded to Madras.

A BENGALI, who had given evidence before the Public Service Commission at Calcutta at variance with the orthodox Bengali views, has been burned in effigy.

MR. JUSTICE CUNNINGHAM has been granted furlough for fifteen months.

MR. CHARLES ELLIOT will probably go home on six months' leave when he has finished the Finance Commission's work.

THE Government of India offices will close in Calcutta on 19th March and reopen in Simla on 4th April.

Notes of the Week.

So far as outward and visible signs can be trusted, the demonstrations of loyalty and rejoicing on account of Her Majesty's Jubilee have been most enthusiastic throughout the whole of India, not only in those cities and districts under immediate and direct British rule, but in all the Native States and territories of independent chiefs. The news of such a mighty ovation offered by so many millions of people of differing races, castes, and creeds to the Kaiser-i-Hind, has been received with the greatest delight and satisfaction by the Queen-Empress, whose interest in and sympathy with the peoples of her Eastern Empire have always been great and sincere. A reverence for their rulers is one of the characteristics of Native subjects, even when the rulers have been cruel and oppressive; but a monarch who can win reverence, not by power alone, but by justice and generous deeds, has a power over the impulsive Oriental nature stronger than any which armed force could supply. Let it be hoped that such a power has been established in India now.

Of course there will be carping critics and cynics who will be ready to remind one that there can be loyalty on the lip with tendency in the heart, and that there is no place in the world easier in which to get up "demonstrations of delight" than in India, where the crowds will always throng to a festival where amusements and fireworks are provided for their delectation. But there is no reason to believe that the Jubilee rejoicings—the object of which has been clearly explained in every district—have been officially or artificially stimulated beyond the "gentle pressure" which it is absolutely necessary sometimes to use in order to make a beginning of any good or important work in the East. The Natives of India may look upon the whole affair as Kismet; but there they are always ready to accept Kismet when accompanied by sweetmeats, holidays, tamâshas, and fireworks.

BUT there is a more satisfactory view to take. It has not been a mere display of shows and rockets. Attempts to make the occasion memorable by instituting certain schemes or making certain arrangements which will hereafter be of real and lasting benefit to the masses have been everywhere encouraged. Much, of course, has been done towards these laudable ends in the presidential cities and towns and in the several districts where British authority rules and guides, but it is gratifying to learn how much has been done by the independent Native Princes and Chiefs for the benefit of their own subjects. A glance at the telegrams which we publish to-day will show what good works the Jubilee has happily inaugurated at their hands. Abolition of transit duties, remission of arrears of land revenue, the institution of dispensaries, libraries, and works of public utility, are practical memorials which will commemorate the occasion in a wise and a befitting manner for years to come.

LORD DUFFERIN having telegraphed to Her Majesty of the enthusiastic manner in which her Jubilee has been celebrated throughout India by all classes of her subjects has been commanded by telegram to convey to the peoples of India the Queen-Empress's warmest thanks and her deep appreciation of their loyalty.

ON Saturday last a spectacle in connection with the Jubilee was witnessed in Bombay which must have astonished both the oldest and youngest inhabitant there. There was a school feast on the Esplanade. Eighteen thousand children of all races and creeds feasted together. The Duke of Connaught and the Governor were present. The children marched past with banners bearing the inscription, "Our Beloved Empress." The enthusiasm was unprecedented. A rich Hindoo has given a sum of money, so that each child present may have a commemorative medal.

THE list of Jubilee honours is a long and comprehensive one, but no doubt it may occasion comment, especially if the commentator be one whose name has been omitted from it. But it appears to have been framed in a very liberal spirit, and surely no one can deny the catholic character of a Gazette which clasps an Afghan Kazi, a Burmese Mounng, a steamboat company agent, the Vice-Chancellor of a University, a Commander-in-Chief, and a Political A.D.C. in its decorative embrace.

SIR FREDERICK ROBERTS has made some admirable arrangements for the pacification of Upper Burma, and has shown much confidence in the Native police, who are to be entrusted with the charge of certain districts and held responsible for the good behaviour of the inhabitants therein. It would appear, however, that the inhabitants themselves have not the same confidence in the arrangements made, and are asking who is to be responsible for the good behaviour of the police? The report that the police are to be armed with Snider rifles, and that all the English and Native troops are to be withdrawn from the inland stations as soon as the police are posted, has caused much disquietude in the minds of orderly well-to-do people. But it is said to have had quite an exhilarating effect upon the dacoits, who have many friends and relatives in the new force, and who consider that the entrusting of firearms to them is an excellent idea. It is to be hoped that matters are not quite as stated, but that the Burman policeman will still be under the eye of a Punjabi superintendent, and that the Snider will be in the hands of the latter.

If a correspondent in the Rangoon Gazette is to be credited, the Postal arrangements at Minbu would appear capable of some amelioration. He writes:—"The Post Office is our great grief. It consists of a tin pot with a movable spout; you drop a letter down the spout, and it remains there, safe as the bank, literally for weeks. A sportive goat may knock it endwise, or a Native of inquiring turn lifts the spout off, stirs the letters round with a stick, reads a few postcards, and goes away. Then a crow looks in and calls his friends, and they drop trifles in until an idle Tommy Atkins heaves a brick at them. I have seen three steamers pass with letters lying undisturbed in our post-box for a week."

THE appointment of Sir E. Bradford to the office rendered vacant by the sad and untimely death of Mr. Augustus Moore was, perhaps, a surprise to many and a disappointment to some expectants. But Sir E. Bradford has done the State much good service, and will bring unflinching zeal and intelligent energy to his new work. One of the best of good fellows socially, he had always a host of friends in India, and his genial nature and pleasant manner of doing business will assuredly make him equally popular at home in an office in which the duties are often difficult, delicate, and onerous.

RECTOR has lately, on more than one occasion, telegraphed from India to the London Press that the European troops in India are about to be armed with repeating rifles. If this were the case it might be thought that the news would first go from England to India; but as the troops at home are not yet armed with such rifles, it is a little premature to telegraph that the troops in India are to be so equipped immediately.

MR. J. DACOSTA, whose knowledge and experience of India have fitted him to treat most ably on questions of Indian Finance, has just issued a very exhaustive pamphlet on "The Financial Situation in India, as Exposed in the Budget Statement for 1886-87," which brochure shall have early attention paid to it in these columns. But we are at the moment so full of Jubilee notes that we are obliged to hold back much matter which would otherwise have appeared this week.

LATEST INTELLIGENCE.

(BY TELEGRAPH.)

(Times Correspondents.)

INDIA.

CALCUTTA, FEB. 20.

The main body of the Public Service Commission arrived at Calcutta on Thursday, and commences its sittings to-morrow. A number of the principal officials in Bengal and private persons will be examined.

The Commander-in-Chief leaves Calcutta this week, and goes first to Rawul Pindi and Peshawur, and then to Beloochistan, where he visits the new cantonments in the Bori Valley, Pishin, the Khojak Pass, and Quetta. General Chesney joins him at Pishin towards the end of March.

General Sir Frederick Roberts has issued a general order to the army expressing regret at the death of Sir Charles Macgregor, whom he describes as an officer of rare merit, distinguished in peace for administrative capacity, and yet more distinguished in war for his great military instinct, personal gallantry, untiring energy, and enterprising hardihood.

The Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal proceeds next week to Purneah to open a section of the Assam and Behar Railway, and then goes to Bhawalpore to open the new waterworks in that city. He will probably make over his office to Sir Stuart Bayley, K.C.S.I., C.I.E., early in April.

The report on the indigo season just closed describes it as one of special interest. The opening of the season was rather dull. Prices fell till about the middle of January, when they began to recover. A distinguishing feature was the large demand from America, which took about 10,000 chests. Russia, contrary to its usual custom, took very little of the best marks; France about as much as usual; Germany less; but London more. The decline in prices is attributed to the largely increased production of indigo in Java. As regards quality it is stated that many Bengal and Benares marks are decidedly inferior, but those from Purneah and Bhawalpore are about an average, while the produce of Behar and Oude is superior to the average.

BURMA.

MANDALAY, FEB. 20.

Sir Charles Bernard leaves to-morrow for Rangoon on the way to England.

The strength of the garrison for Upper Burma after the withdrawal of the troops under orders to return to India was fixed at 16,000, together with the same number of new police. General Arbuthnot considers this force sufficient to afford a fair amount of protection to the peaceable villagers, although not at once to put down dacoity. He believes the withdrawal of troops to India and the approaching hot season are certain to lead to a temporary increase of dacoity and possibly to a reformation of the larger bands recently dispersed. With an efficient military and police force of the above-mentioned numbers he sees no cause for anxiety. The police force is, however, but little above half its proper strength. There are not quite 5,000 police from Northern India and about 3,500 Burmese. General Arbuthnot considers that in these latter not much confidence as yet can be placed. The deficiency in the police force will be met by two additional regiments of Native Infantry from India, and by retaining the Goorkha regiment now on the Manipur frontier and a second regiment of cavalry. The strength of the mounted infantry will also be increased. From want of ponies it is now nearly 800 short of the strength fixed by Sir F. Roberts—namely 1,600.

Captain Gordon, of the 15th Hussars, formerly Adjutant of Methuen's Horse, has come to Mandalay to advise about the equipments of the mounted infantry.

In General Arbuthnot's opinion the civil staff of Upper Burma ought to be largely increased. The present condition of Mandalay well illustrates the necessity for the increase. Mr. Burgess, Commissioner for Mandalay, has been absent for two months, and does not return for six weeks. The Deputy Commissioner leaves to-morrow for a six weeks' tour in the Shan States. The administration of Mandalay during their absence is entrusted to the police superintendent. Mandalay is left thus unprovided with officials at a most critical period, when attempts to renew incendiary fires and disturbances may be anticipated.

THE QUEEN'S JUBILEE.

[REUTER'S TELEGRAM.]

CALCUTTA, FEB. 16.

At sunrise this morning an Imperial salute of 101 guns from the ramparts of Fort William announced the beginning of the Jubilee festival.

Soon after 8 o'clock the garrisons of Calcutta, Dum-Dum, and Barrackpore were drawn up on the parade-ground between the Fort and the Chowringhee-road in the following order:—A battery of field artillery, two garrison batteries, the Calcutta Naval Artillery Volunteers and Mounted Rifles, a squadron of Native Cavalry, the Canadian and Derbyshire regiments, the Calcutta Rifle Volunteers, and three regiments of Native infantry. Thousands of spectators, in carriages, on horseback, and on foot, surrounded the ground. At 9 o'clock precisely the Viceroy, wearing his insignia of the Star of India, attended by the Commander-in-Chief and a brilliant staff, and escorted by a bodyguard, rode up from Government House, Lady Dufferin and her family arriving in carriages. After the inspection of the troops the field battery fired an Imperial salute, the infantry a feu de joie, and the massed bands played the National Anthem. Then three cheers were given for the Empress, and the troops marched past. This finished the review.

The Viceroy afterwards, having entered a carriage with Lady Dufferin, drove in State to the cathedral. A short special service was held, after which followed the Te Deum special prayers, and an anthem.

The rejoicings were resumed this afternoon, the scene being the grand stand on the racecourse. Soon after 4 o'clock the grand stand and its temporary annexes were well filled with ticket-holders, as were also the adjoining spaces reserved for carriages, school children, soldiers, and sailors, while the plain beyond the course was covered with a dense crowd on foot. Facing the grand stand was a scarlet-covered dais, on each side of which were ranged seats for the delegates who were to present addresses.

The Viceroy, Lady Dufferin, their suite, and the escort arrived at 5 o'clock. They were received by the Lieutenant-Governor, who presented the members of the Jubilee Committee, and then requested the Viceroy to receive the gentlemen deputed by various public bodies to present addresses for transmission to the Queen. His Excellency having signified his pleasure to that effect the deputations were led up in turn, and introduced by the Chief Secretary of the Bengal Government. Each deputation as it came up handed its address to the Lieutenant-Governor, who delivered it to the Viceroy, while the delegates passed to their seats. Owing to the large number of public bodies represented the presentation of addresses occupied more than an hour, after which the Viceroy addressed the assembly, and the bands played the National Anthem. A display of fireworks, which concluded the proceedings, was received with great enthusiasm and delight by the crowds of Natives. It was nearly night before the assembly began to disperse.

Special thanksgiving services were held this morning in the Roman Catholic Cathedral and the Scotch Church here.

CALCUTTA, FEB. 17.

The scene at the race-stand yesterday was very striking. Ninety-two deputations, consisting of about 350 delegates, presented to the Viceroy loyal addresses for transmission to the Queen. The first deputation was that of the Calcutta Corporation. Next came the Asiatic Society and the Bengal Chamber of Commerce. Then followed a host of delegates representing the commercial and landed interests of Lower Bengal, and the municipalities, literary, and political societies, the Hindoo, Mahomedan, Armenian, and Jewish communities, &c. The Lieutenant-Governor, in his opening speech, called special attention to the fact that this was the first occasion on which delegates from bodies elected under the local self-government scheme were present in the metropolis.

After all the addresses had been presented the Viceroy made an eloquent speech, which was loudly applauded. He laid stress on the fact that in a land where official action was generally the prime mover, officialism had for once stood aside and had left the nation face to face with the Empress, to whom from the whole Indian Empire, he said, there had to-day gone up the incense of an honest, trustful devotion. He hoped that the great achievements of the Victorian era did but foreshadow even greater and happier times. While fully approving that natural ambition of the Natives for more extensive association with the administration of the country, he hoped it would not divert them from equally imperative duties lying outside the circle of political interests, such as improved agriculture, sanitation, education, industry, and art. He could say from personal knowledge that there was no section of the Queen's subjects whose interests [she] watched with more affectionate solicitude than those of India. Through the mysterious decrees of Providence the British nation had been called to undertake the government of that mighty Empire, to defend it, to rule it justly, and eventually to form it into a loyal, patriotic, and compact whole. When that result would be achieved was a secret hidden in the future, but meanwhile there was no resolve more fixed in the will of England, no wish dearer to the heart of Her Majesty and to the British people, than to faithfully, firmly, and boldly discharge those difficult and stupendous duties for the benefit of their Indian fellow-subjects and brothers. The speech was greeted with loud and prolonged cheering.

Besides the thanksgiving services already mentioned [special services were held in the Baptist and Greek churches, in the Jewish synagogues, the Brahmin and Parsee temples, and in several English, Scotch, and Catholic churches.

The illuminations this evening were most successful. Calcutta is peculiarly adapted for such displays. This evening she surpassed herself, and presented a scene of fairylike beauty. The views from the open plan on the Maidan were especially striking. On one side was Fort William, the ramparts and the lines of barracks being lined with lamps, and each gate a blaze of fire. On the other side was the long line of mansions of the Chowringhee-road, all brilliantly lighted, the most brilliant being the Indian Museum. In front was Esplanade-row, a line of imposing public buildings, among which the Treasury, the Town Hall, and the High Court were decorated in a most tasteful and effective manner. Dalhousie-square also presented a magnificent spectacle. The Bengal Secretariat, which extends along the whole north side of the square, the General Post Office on the west, the Paper Currency Office on the east, and the Telegraph Office on the south were the most remarkable features, the last two being, perhaps, the most effective of the public offices.

Old Court-house-street, wherein the principal shops are situate, was lighted with great taste, especially the premises of Hamilton and Co., jewellers. The illuminations were for the most part as simple as they were effective, there being few transparencies and not many mottoes. Gas was not much used; the mass of the lights consisted of earthenware and small glass oil-lamps, interspersed with occasional coloured lights and Chinese lanterns. The night was very calm, with no wind or rain to interfere with the display.

The only drawback to the general completeness of the spectacle was that on the shipping there was for the most part little or no attempt to illuminate. There were, however, some striking exceptions, the most beautiful being, perhaps, the British India Company's steamer Nowshera. But the appearance of the ghats and jetties along the river bank, the Port Commissioner's office, and other buildings along Strand-road went far to atone for the darkness hanging over the river. The streets were densely thronged. The crowds, which were, as usual in India most orderly, showed childlike enthusiasm and delight. From the beginning of the festivities yesterday morning the Natives participated in them most heartily. To-night their enjoyment reaches the culminating point, and certainly no better means could have been devised to bring home the meaning of the Jubilee to the minds of the most ignorant.

The Viceregal party left Government-house at seven o'clock. They drove along the principal streets, followed by numberless private carriages and vehicles of every kind. The procession is still going on, and shows no signs of ending. It may safely be said that no one who has seen to-night's spectacle will ever forget the manner in which the Indian metropolis did honour to the Jubilee of the Empress of India.

CALCUTTA, FEB. 20.

India is now quieting down to its normal state, but accounts of the rejoicings in more remote stations continue to pour in. These rejoicings for the most part are reproductions on a smaller scale of those of the capital—thanksgiving services among all religions and sects, processions, parades wherever troops are stationed, fireworks, and illuminations. Every district of British India and every Native State have been jointly celebrating the occasion, and the most humble demonstrations have been characterised by the same enthusiasm and loyalty as animated the magnificent displays of the great cities.

At Morshedabad there was a grand procession headed by the Nawab Bahadur and his family. At Benares a durbar was held, and the city was illuminated. At Agra the Taj was illuminated, and an exhibition of local industries was held. At Lucknow dinners were given to the poor. At Jhansi a subscription was opened to build a Victoria-gate to the city. At Ulwar the Maharajah presented 50,000 rupees to Lady Dufferin's fund and founded a women's hospital. At Sibi Colonel St. John held a durbar which many Brahui and Belooch chiefs attended. Sirdar Asad Khan, C.I.E., and the leading Brahui chiefs presented an address. At Pishin the ceremony consisted in sending an engine for the first time over four miles of tunnels and viaducts which take the railway through Chuppar Rift and over Chuppar-bridge. The bridge is 600ft. long and 300ft. high. Thus the day was marked by a triumph over the greatest obstacle encountered by the Sind-Pishin Railway. At Bangalore the Maharajah of Mysore and the British Resident reviewed the troops. The Maharajah held a durbar, and the town was illuminated. To-morrow the East Indian Railway Company will celebrate the jubilee by the formal opening of the Hooghly Railway Bridge, a work the conclusion of which will be appropriately marked by the honour of knighthood being conferred on its designer, Mr. Bradford Leslie.

MADRAS, FEB. 20.

At Madras the Jubilee rejoicings began on Wednesday morning. At 7 o'clock there was a parade of troops and volunteers. Special services were held at most places of worship during the day. Large congregations, including the Governor, the Judges, and high officials, attended the Cathedral service, which concluded with the National Anthem.

At half-past five the Governor arrived in State at the banquet hall, where an address was read and presented by Mr. Hutchins, chairman of the central committee. The Governor made an excellent reply, after which the National Anthem was sung.

The Governor gave a State banquet in the evening, and at nine o'clock there was a grand display of fireworks on the island.

The Madras Presidency subscriptions amount to nearly 1,12,000 rupees, which will be devoted to a memorial address in a casket, to the Victoria Technical Institute, and to the Imperial Institute in London.

BOMBAY, FEB. 16.

The celebration of the Queen's Jubilee began here this morning with a parade of troops. Afterwards, at half past eight o'clock, the Governor drove in State to the Town Hall, which was brightly decorated, and received addresses from the Municipality, the University, and public bodies in all parts of the Presidency.

The scene was a striking one. The Governor stood, surrounded by the naval and military officers, the civil officials, and Natives of consideration, at the head of the lofty steps leading to the facade of the Town Hall, there being in front an open space kept by soldiers, sailors, and volunteers. The streets, windows, and roofs were crowded with Natives, who displayed great enthusiasm. The Governor made an eloquent speech.

The Queen's experience, he said, had in critical times, been of immense benefit to the nation. The characteristic of her reign was the activity of moral forces among the people. Industrial education, which had been initiated by the late Prince Consort, was the great want of India. The progress of India was largely due to the ability of the Civil Service. The pledges of the Queen's Proclamation had been redeemed. The relations between England, India, and the Colonies had never been more cordial, and it was the Throne which united Englishmen most.

At the conclusion of this speech the Royal Standard was unfurled, a salute was fired, and cheers were raised by the vast crowd. There was next a procession to the Cathedral, where choral thanksgiving services were held.

This evening Lord and Lady Reay met the Duke and Duchess of Connaught, and a procession of carriages was formed, the Governor, with their Royal Highnesses and Lady Reay, occupying the leading one. The distinguished party drove through the principal streets, which were brilliantly illuminated with festoons and coloured lamps on the walls, gas devices, with the words "God save the Queen," "We are Happy," "England and India United," being placed over the windows. The arches of the Victoria Railway terminus were lighted with electricity, the effect being very fine. The University tower and hall, the Post-office, and the Secretariat buildings were adorned with coloured lamps, the whole constituting a highly picturesque spectacle.

The procession moved down to the pier and gazed on the ship-ping in the harbour, all lighted up—a veritable scene from fairy-land. The party afterwards drove to the fair on the Esplanade, filled with thousands of sightseers, and here the enthusiasm was the greatest. The Queen's statue was seen in a great arch, splendidly lighted up. The Governor, Lady Reay, and the Duke and Duchess finally drove to Government House.

The enthusiasm and rejoicing displayed by the people have never been surpassed, and no more striking or beautiful sight was ever seen in Bombay.

BOMBAY, FEB. 17.

The Jubilee celebration commenced at Poonah on Sunday with a special service. The Duke and Duchess of Connaught gave a State ball on Monday, the rooms used being superbly decorated. Their Royal Highnesses dined at the Club on Tuesday, when the Duke delivered a short but earnest address, which was much cheered. He held a grand parade of troops yesterday, and afterwards rode through the fair to the poultry show. The Duke and Duchess left for Bombay in the afternoon. Three thousand Eurasian and European children went in procession during the day to the fair, singing the National Anthem. A durbar was held in the evening, and the gardens and bridge were beautifully illuminated. Fireworks were displayed on the river, and there was a general illumination of the city and the cantonments, which was witnessed by countless crowds. The greatest enthusiasm prevailed.

A State ball is given to-night by the Governor to 3,000 persons of all races. The grounds are brilliantly illuminated. The Duke and Duchess of Connaught are present.

BURMA.

In Rangoon and neighbourhood the whole population showed enthusiasm in celebrating the Jubilee. The proceedings commenced with a review of the troops in the early morning. The National Anthem was then sung by some 5,000 school-children assembled on the parade-ground, who at the suggestion of the Viceroy were given a "treat." Thanksgiving services in the Cathedral and other churches followed.

Commissioner Hodgkinson held a durbar in the afternoon, and received addresses from the various races for transmission to the Queen. He also announced the Jubilee acts of grace and the honours, which were received with much satisfaction. One month of all sentences on ordinary prisoners is remitted, but no rebels, dacoits, or robbers captured during the recent disturbances will be released until order has been completely restored. The erection of a permanent memorial, to include a statue of the Queen and a memorial-hall, has been decided on. Ten per cent. of the funds collected are to be devoted to the Imperial Institute.

At Mandalay there was much public rejoicing, in which the Natives largely participated. Numerous triumphal arches had been erected, and a large temporary building had been constructed to the south-west of the city moat, and gaily decorated in the Burmese style. At noon General Arbuthnot and Sir C. Bernard, accompanied by their staffs and a large number of officers, and escorted by cavalry, arrived at this building. A large crowd of the Burmese had assembled in and round the structure, all in their holiday attire, and in their dresses of brilliant colours they formed a striking spectacle, as they stood in dense masses, thick as standing corn, and gorgeous as a field of flowers. Among the spectators in the building were two sisters of the ex-King Thebaw, three Queens of the late King Mindone-Min, and a crowd of princesses who blazed with diamonds and rubies.

A salute of 101 guns was fired, and the combined bands of six Native regiments played the National Anthem. Sir C. Bernard then addressed the assembly, announcing that all sentences passed on the insurgents in Upper Burma would be revised, and remitted as far as possible. He also announced several appointments to the dignities of C.S.I., and C.I.E., including that of the Kinwoon Mingyee and another Burman official. Robes of honour were bestowed on four Buddhist bishops and two monks, and dresses of honour were presented to several persons on whom the Viceroy conferred honorary titles. Dances and dramatic performances were then given by Burmese, Shans, Brahmans, and Chinese.

NATIVE STATES.

At Indore the Maharajah laid the foundation stone of a library to be called the Victoria Library, and entertained the Governor General's Agent and all the Military and Civil Officers at a banquet. Prisoners were released, and food and money distributed to the poor. Prayers were said in the temples for the Queen, and there was a display of fireworks and illuminations in the evening.

At Bhopal there was a general holiday, with a parade of the troops, an Imperial salute, and an illumination of the city. The Begum gave a state banquet, and distributed food to the poor. The foundation stone of the new waterworks was laid.

At Gwalior the foundation stone of the Victoria College was laid, and a general holiday observed. After an Imperial salute, a review, and illuminations of the city and the fortress—for the first time since the Mahrattas have held it—took place. Prisoners were released. All arrears of the land-revenue—amounting to a million sterling—are remitted.

At Rewah the foundation stone of a dispensary was laid; a holiday was kept, and a parade of troops took place. In the evening there was a general illumination.

CAPTAIN R. TEMPLE, B.S.O., has been appointed Cantonment Magistrate of Mandalay.

A CORRESPONDENT writes to a Bombay paper:—Thirteen years ago I was present at the meeting in the Dome at Brighton, when, in the presence of 5,000 of his constituents, the late Professor Fawcett received his presentation from "the grateful people of India" of a cheque for the payment of his election expenses and a service of plate. To-night at the meeting convened for the purpose of deciding as to the disposal of the Fawcett Memorial Fund only half-a-dozen gentlemen presented themselves at the Bombay Presidency Association Rooms. A sum of 5,000 rupees has been subscribed. They modestly declined to say what should be done with it, and adjourned the meeting forthwith. Is this all the "immortality" which attends upon those who have loved their fellow-men?

ANGLO-INDIAN PRESS.

SIR M. E. GRANT DUFF'S PARTHIAN SHOT.

(Bombay Gazette.)

The readers of Sir M. E. Grant Duff's reply in the Contemporary Review to Mr. Samuel Smith's "India Revisited" will be equally in doubt as to whether Mr. Smith was the most competent critic of British administration in India, or the ex-Governor of Madras was its most competent vindicator. Mr. Smith seems to have first come to India nearly a quarter of a century ago on a commercial mission which lays in Bombay and in the cotton-growing districts of the Western Presidency. His second visit had a more public purpose, but it gave him no larger opportunities of investigation than a cold weather tour gives to an intelligent and an inquiring traveller, and he appears to have been as rapid in coming to his conclusions as he was in moving from place to place. Sir M. E. Grant Duff's delicate taunt that he spent "nearly a whole day" in Madras is a suggestive comment upon the thoroughness of a part, at least, of the energetic tourist's inquiry, and is an adequate rejoinder to anything that Mr. Smith may have said about the condition of the Southern Presidency, and to much of his criticism of other localities. However, although Sir M. E. Grant Duff has spent more years than Mr. Smith has spent months in India, and, if we mistake not, has, like him, "revisited" the country, the exculpatory value of his reply is not a little reduced by the simple fact that he is—well, Sir M. E. Grant Duff. The supreme contempt which breathes throughout his article for all that to the unsophisticated Mr. Samuel Smith seemed evidence of the condition of the country and of the opinions and wants of its people will seem to many of his readers to seriously minimise the value of his reply. From a literary point of view it is, of course, crushing enough. But it is a little too merciless, and it crushes a good deal that might with no great disadvantage have been left alone. We are not all of us so easily persuaded as Sir M. E. Grant Duff seems to be that the whole of what we call public opinion in this country is an inflated body, without weight, substance, or coherency. Even a cold weather tourist who had his ears open would by chance come in contact here and there with a statement of grievances that was real and worth listening to. It is easy enough to set down in a phrase as "pert scribblers for the Native Press" the people who sit in congresses and who try to persuade new-comers from Europe that all is not going for the best in the body social and politic, and if Sir M. E. Grant Duff had no other purpose than that of imitating one of the most familiar phrases in Burke there was no particular reason why he should not caution us against "taking the voice of the frogs croaking in a back water for the opinion of all the creatures in the neighbouring river, from the smallest fish up to the crocodile." The chief objection to it is that it may tempt people to ask if Sir M. E. Grant Duff was more attentive to the voice of the crocodiles of the Madras Presidency than to the croakings of the frogs. His impartial contempt for every sort of public opinion when he was in the country seriously disqualified him for pronouncing which voice is worth listening to and which is not. Mr. Smith was doubtless long enough in India to hear something upon that point, and we do not suppose that he will take too seriously Sir M. E. Grant Duff's profound observation that the Natives whom Mr. Smith saw would have been ready to assure him that Lord Dufferin breakfasted every morning upon curried babies if they thought that the information would please him. It is an article of faith with him that the whole thing is a sham, and he only indulges in variations upon an easy theme when he tells us that a few Europeans are pulling the strings, that all the Western tricks of bogus agitation are resorted to, including enthusiastic public meetings, consisting of an orator and a reporter, and that the whole business is a mere repetition of the parrot cries of European mischief-makers, by busy and pushing talkers just clever enough to be ingeniously wrong on most subjects. Oddly enough the only exponent of Indian opinion whom he names as trustworthy is the Maharajah of Vizianagram. We do not forget that that worthy man gave him a dinner the day before he left Madras, and paid him the doubtful homage of a ridiculous encomium.

Parthian shots like these will doubtless find their mark somewhere, but they are not the most effective missiles that a defender of the British administration in India could choose. There are other ways than those which Sir M. E. Grant Duff has chosen of saying that that which passes for the public opinion of India is the voice of but an infinitesimally small fraction of the population, and that it might be dangerous to interpret it as an absolute and reliable indicator of the direction in which the promotion of the interests of the country is to be sought. We may caution Mr. Smith against too confident an appeal to what he calls the educated Native tribunal without pulling its judges from their seats and dancing over their prostrate bodies in their own court. Sir M. E. Grant Duff owes it mainly to his obstinate inattention to every expression of public opinion in this country that he credits pert scribblers and the retailers of parrot cries with the propagation of the theory that India is becoming a poorer country instead of a richer. Everybody who looks around him knows that the mere talking politicians of India have never been attracted by economic subjects, and that those who have busied themselves with this matter are few and far between, that they are the reverse of "glib," and that they have thus far awakened far more interest among Europeans than amongst their own countrymen. It would scarcely be too much to say that the "Bankruptcy of India" and allied subjects have been far more eagerly discussed in England than in this country. The subject is fairly open to discussion, and we gladly accept, as a contribution to the brighter view of it, Sir M. E. Grant Duff's testimony to the increasing well-being of the districts with which he is best acquainted. He meets in a characteristically dogmatic way the very widely prevalent belief that this country is not always fairly treated in financial arrangements between India and England. "I don't agree," he says, and he enforces his disagreement by echoing on behalf of the English Government, Olive's famous "By God, I am astonished at my own moderation." All we need say is that the Government of India do not share in the astonishment. They altogether failed to appreciate the moderation of the Imperial authorities when England determined that her share of the cost of the Afghan war should not exceed five millions; they have never appreciated the moderation which imposes upon India the cost of the home depôts of British regiments serving in India, and in numberless cases they have had to submit to financial arrangements which to them, at all events, seemed inequitable and unfair. We more than half suspect, indeed, that upon this matter, as upon others, Sir M. E. Grant Duff has written with something less than an official knowledge of the facts that he has proposed to deal with.

CASTE PREJUDICES.

(Pioneer.)

It is a significant sign of the rapid strides of progress among the Natives of India during the last quarter of a century that, in the mass of evidence given before the Public Service Commission, the question of caste prejudices in connection with crossing the seas by candidates for civil employment is treated as of altogether minor importance. Thus of three Native witnesses examined a few days ago in Calcutta, one, a very old servant of the Government in the Uncovenanted branch, said the prejudice against voyaging to England still lingered among the higher castes, but was diminishing—"there was absolutely no insuperable barrier to a Hindu being re-admitted to his society and being of his family again after his visit to England." This witness added that the performance of certain expiatory ceremonies enjoined in the Shastras would be necessary on the part of the Hindu on his return to his own country, and by implication we should conclude that he would advocate such ceremonies being submitted to. Another witness, a Deputy Collector of eighteen years' service, would encourage candidates to go to England, and if they were young men would "insist" upon their going. "There were caste prejudices among some families, but they should not be listened to." A third, a zemindar of Hughli, would not compel candidates to go, but would encourage them to do so. Now, it is obvious from statements of this kind that the ever-widening circles made by the stone of education which we have cast into the still pool of Hinduism have reached and are obliterating the surface scum of caste prejudices which but a generation ago no one would have ventured to interfere with. Those prejudices were supposed to be so deep-rooted that nothing could destroy them. Had we attempted rudely to uproot them we might have failed, and failed dangerously; but imperceptibly and quietly they have died away, and we hear less and less of them day by day. It would indeed seem that India is furnishing a striking proof of the theory advanced by Tocqueville regarding the changes wrought when a religious belief is secretly undermined by doctrines which may be termed negative, since they deny the truth of one religion without affirming that of any other. "Prodigious revolutions then take place in the human mind, without the apparent co-operation of the passions of man, and almost without his knowledge. . . . In ages which answer to his description men desert their religious opinions from lukewarmness rather than from dislike; they do not reject them, but the sentiments by which they were once fostered disappear." In the liberal education which the State provides for the people of India religion has no place: there is no affirmation of the truth of Christianity, but the doctrines of civilisation with which the Hindu student is saturated none the less undermine, negatively it may be, the religious belief which he would otherwise have accepted as his fathers accepted it before him.

AN ARMY RESERVE FOR INDIA.

(Times of India.)

The present unsettled and stormy condition of European politics renders it more than ever necessary that the question of a reserve force for the army in India should be carefully worked out, and some reliable basis obtained upon which to act. Recent legislation on this point has been in the right direction and has created the nucleus of a reserve which may amount to thirty or four thousand men, and which will save us a number of Sepoys who have been thoroughly trained, but who would otherwise be lost to the country owing to the fact that the state of their family affairs necessitates their taking their discharge and withdrawing from the active army. But thirty thousand men is little enough when we consider the enormous strength of continental armies, and the scheme requires to be pushed further and thoroughly applied to the whole of the forces in India before it can be said to have properly supplied our needs. Not only for the Native army but also for the whole of the departments should some system of reserve be introduced, for, during a serious war, the draft of sergeants from the regiments required to fill the departmental ranks would be more than could be met without serious injury to the fighting units. More especially is this the case with the Medical Department, where we lately saw the pensioners had to be drawn on for service in Madras to set free the requisite number of men for active service in Burma. This was the proper course of action under the circumstances, but the fact that such a call was necessary shows a certain amount of weakness in the system. If a comparatively small affair like Burma, where about 20,000 men are employed, cannot be arranged for without calling on pensioned apothecaries to provide for the duties of the Madras garrisons, how much more would a really serious campaign on a large scale deplete the medical resources of the province. Doctors can be procured in sufficient numbers, for the number of young men in England who have passed well, but have attained to but small practices, is very great, and the offer of even temporary employment would tempt hundreds. But the subordinate staff would be better recruited in this country, as in their case an immediate knowledge of Hindustani is essential in most cases. To provide for this steps might be taken to create a reserve of apothecaries either by forming a reserve corps to which men might go after twelve years' service, at a rate lower than the full active pay, or by allowing a certain number to take their pensions at an earlier period than that at which they would otherwise be eligible for it on condition that they should be liable to be called out as reserve men. Efficient apothecaries cannot be trained in a day, and a body such as we have described would form an efficient second line and enable the authorities to organise the medical arrangements of a campaign without any fear of running short of men. For the routine work reserve men would be much more useful than any outsiders, however well trained they might be, from a medical point of view.

Far more important, however, than any department is the question of a reserve for the Native army, for, under present circumstances, the number of men required to hold the various Indian garrisons would seriously cripple the sources from which an army could be drawn to operate beyond the frontier. Even for local expeditions, troops have to be drawn with great regard for the proportions left behind in various districts, and for a great war with a European Power, such as France or Russia, the country would have to be still more strongly held, as the discontented and turbulent spirits, of which there are plenty in our larger towns, would seize the opportunity and rise on their own account if the troops were withdrawn. It may be, as some enthusiasts urge, degrading to have to confess that we still held the country by the sword; but the fact remains, and must be faced. However great the care and attention paid to the health and sanitation of the troops, and in India such care is anxiously taken, it is inevitable that a certain proportion of every regiment will be found unfit to march with their battalion on service, and a still larger proportion will become ineffective during the first six months' campaigning. To meet this constant drain, and to keep the battalions up to full strength, notwithstanding losses from sickness and wounds, Government started a reserve, not to provide extra battalions, but to fill those already existing. This scheme would bring up about 30,000 men to the colours if applied throughout India, and that number, assisted by the number of recruits available, will be sufficient to keep the battalions on active service fully supplied. But this reserve is not enough for all the calls of a great campaign. Thirty or forty thousand men would soon be swallowed up in an army a hundred thousand strong, and would, at least, be insufficient to form additional battalions. What is really required is a source from which additional army corps can be drawn to swell our forces at critical times, and to take up those important irregular duties of reconnaissance and the guarding of the line of communications, which increase so enormously as an army advances into a hostile country, or even in a friendly country leaves its base.

No country in the world possesses so fine a reserve as India, if only Government would consent to use it, for it is a natural and ready-made reserve only requiring a few bold touches with the pruning-knife and a little training to render it the most formidable second line of modern times. The armies of the Native States, if properly taken in hand, with a few English officers scattered among them, would produce a splendid body of irregular troops. This would necessitate a considerable reduction of the total number allowed to each chief, but as the men dismissed would only constitute the rabble or tail which invariably accompanies every purely Native army, and as the remainder would be well drilled and well armed, the chiefs would probably much prefer the new arrangement. In some States, as, for instance,

Baroda, reorganisation has been commenced from within, but in others it would require the British initiative before the reform could be carried out. The present regular service consists of about 180,000 men, British and Native, though the late additions to the British forces and the new battalions may bring the number up to nearly 200,000 of all ranks. Of this number we could not, under present circumstances, keep more than 60,000 in the field for any length of time, and that only with considerable difficulty. It is calculated, however, that the armies of Native States, when remodelled, would aggregate about two hundred thousand. This vast force, if thoroughly trained, would enable us to take 100,000 of our regular army for service, their places being taken by the contingents, while an army corps of 30,000 might be taken direct from this source and employed on irregular duties. They might either be used by themselves under British generals, or added to the various divisions as light troops. It would even be possible to form, say a quarter of the whole force into a regular reserve, giving the commissions, except a few of the highest, and the staff appointments to Native gentlemen of good family. This would open out a career to the youth of the Indian nobility such as is at present denied to them, and by finding them work suitable to their tastes and inclinations, eliminate the slightly disloyal feelings which are, in most of them, only the fruits of idleness. The peculiar constitution of these armies would prevent their officers from clashing with those of the regular army in times of peace, and in war any difficulties might be easily arranged. The troops would, of course, require thorough remodeling on the irregular system, but we have plenty of officers fully capable of that, but a careful watch must be kept to see that too many British officers are not employed and that the reserve thus formed is kept as a career for Natives. The present is a very suitable time for the consideration of the subject, for we hope to see our regular army re-armed throughout within the next three or four years, and the weapons thus available could be issued to the new force. Some few men consider it an act of folly to arm such a body with breech-loaders, but it is, in reality, the truest wisdom, as Natives can find and use ammunition for muzzle-loading rifles, but could never manufacture the cartridges requisite for breech-loaders without establishments created on purpose. By keeping these in our own hands we ensure that none of the troops can be turned against us with any effect. The commissions in these regiments would, of course, be entirely in the hands of the chiefs, but arrangements might be made for a certain proportion, say one in five, to be placed at the disposal of the British Government, as a channel of promotion for deserving Native officers of the regular army. By these means, a gradual leavening of the mass could be effected, and, in a few years, the standard of efficiency would perceptibly rise. Such a reserve, being complete in all details, would be useful as the present reserve could never be useful, for it could act independently, without making any sudden call on the resources and the officers of the Regular army.

THE RAJPOOT STATES.

(Statesman.)

In acknowledging the receipt from the Foreign Department of the Government of India of the annual report of the political administration of the Rajpootana States for 1885-86, we are obliged to say that it is impossible to imagine a more useless or unsatisfactory record than it presents. If the Government really desires that the public should know by means of these reports what our relations with these States really are, we can only say that the effort is absolutely frustrate, and that if the purpose were to throw an impenetrable veil over their conduct, it could not succeed more completely than it does by these administration reports. They disclose literally nothing that the public desires to know, or feels the least interest in knowing. They consist of a series of disjointed, ill-arranged, and altogether unimportant notes as to facts in which it is impossible to take the slightest interest, while they are strung together with a perfunctoriness that is stamped on every page of them, and that has resulted in the present case in producing a confused mass of information concerning the States that it would require the most careful editing to make even intelligible. If we say that the report bears upon its face that it is produced only to conform with the rule that requires its production, and that its effect is to weary the reader instead of interesting him, we are not speaking too strongly. The report is a reflection upon everyone who has had any part in its preparation. It is not honest work, either in its conception or execution. The report is produced in conformity with the rule that requires it to be submitted, but as to serving any good purpose the idea has not entered the mind of its compilers. We know that these States are seething with life, and that they are the arena in which some of the most important problems of the empire are being worked out, while an impenetrable veil is thrown over the whole. So completely is this purpose achieved that a stranger to the country could not even gather from the report the simple facts of our relation with these States. It would surprise him to be told that the report was intended to describe the admiration of a series of independent States, that are supposed to be ruled by their own Native princes. It is the Prince of Denmark, with the part of Hamlet omitted all through. Not one word is there about the Native princes themselves or their rule. All that we see is a series of moving pictures in which the only figures to be discerned are the Political Agent, the Resident, the Superintendent, the Vaccinator, the Engineer. The Native Princes never show at all. We suppose they are somewhere in the retirement of the background, but we have to guess at their existence even there. Never was there a more unsatisfactory state of matters. We know that the State are full of heartburnings and resentment at the practical exclusion of their Rulers from all real power in their own dominions, and a more unsatisfactory attempt to describe what is going on was certainly never made.

BENGAL.

THE price of glass lamps and other articles used for the purposes of illumination went up in Calcutta between two and three hundred per cent. The demand for small glass lights was enormous. It is stated that 100,000 of these lights were ordered for Government House, and for the East Indian Railway amounted to no less than seven lakhs.

It is proposed to commemorate the Jubilee in Patna by reviving the scheme of an industrial school which was first originated to commemorate the visit of the Prince of Wales. A lakh was subscribed by the Behar chiefs for the purpose, to which Syed Lofali Khan added another lakh for the purchase of tools and machinery for use in the school. The money subscribed was advanced to the Municipality as a loan at three per cent. interest, and with this fund as a nucleus it is proposed to place the school on a permanent and satisfactory footing.

THE experiments to improve the quality of the class of wheat grown in Bengal are, a Calcutta contemporary says, gradually attaining success, chiefly owing to the introduction of a better kind of seed. In the Birbhoom division experiments were first made by introducing seeds from Mozafarnagar and Delhi, the cultivators being ignorant of the fact that the very best wheat grown in India, called "Buxar No. 1 Club" is largely produced and exported from parts of the Shahabad district in Behar. So great was the difference in value between the Buxar wheat and that grown in the neighbouring division of Bhagulpore that the committee of the Calcutta Wheat Trade Association valued it at four annas per maund higher. The Bhagulpore cultivators at once introduced the Buxar seed, with such satisfactory results that the Wheat Association described the produce as "a splendid description of wheat, soft, mellow, bold, regular, and of good colour," and estimated it as worth six annas a maund more than the local Bhagulpore grain. As soon as this fact became known to the landowners in the Bhagulpore and other divisions, applications for hundreds of maunds of Buxar seed were sent to Behar.

A CONTEMPORARY says that there is one old soldier still living in India who paraded at Dum-Dum to "assist" in the firing of the salute which marked the accession of the Queen fifty years ago, and who was present, we doubt not, on the Calcutta Maidan on the 16th to see the salute fired in honour of the Jubilee of the Queen-Empress. Quartermaster-Sergeant N. W. Bancroft enlisted for the old Bengal Artillery at Dum-Dum in the year 1833, being then just nine years and two months of age, and consequently eligible for the band. At the age of eighteen he became a trumpeter in the Horse Artillery, and in 1845 elected to become a gunner. In the modest little book in which he tells the story of his soldiering (From Recruit to Staff-Sergeant: Calcutta City Press, 1885) we have vivid descriptions of the actions fought during the Sutlej Campaign, the writer having had the good fortune to share in the battles of Moodkee, Ferozeshah, Alival, and Sohraon. He had seen, before this, the return of Pollock's avenging army from Cabul, when Lord Ellenborough met it at Ferozepore, and gave it that welcome which it had so richly earned. A severe cannon shot wound at Ferozeshah was the mark which Sergeant Bancroft carried with him from Sikh campaigns; but this did not prevent him from seeing more fighting in the Punjab from 1850 to 1864. In the Mutiny he saw more tough work, being engaged in the Meerut and Bulandshahr Districts, while the siege of Delhi was going on; sharing in the capture of Lucknow; and going through the campaign in Rohilkhand, where what are called minor affairs were most numerous. Four medals with eight clasps were his reward for his campaigning. Sergeant Bancroft took his discharge in 1866 on his 21. 3d. a day, and entered civil employ. He is now Superintendent of the Native Lunatic Asylum at Bhowanipore, and has nearly twenty-one years of service under Government to his credit, in addition to his thirty-three in the Artillery. He is now sixty-three years of age, but has yet to serve four years for half-pay pension in civil employ; and, this being so, he may well be granted a small request he is making to the Government to be allowed to retire on half-pay should his health break down.

MADRAS.

THE Madras Mail regrets to learn that Mr. F. N. Thorowgood, C.E., Superintendent of the Madras Harbour Works, has requested the Government to accept his resignation, as he is unable to accept the view entertained by the Harbour Trustees of his responsibility to their board.

MISS POOSON, Government astronomer, has received a cablegram to telegraph observations of a new comet which was discovered on the 18th ult. at Cordoba. It is expected to become very brilliant during the year with a tail two degrees long. The comet is now situated in the Crane constellation.

ON the 25th ult. a banquet was given at Pondicherry to M. de Lanessau, Deputy of the Seine, who has been charged by the French Government with a roving commission to inquire into the comparative condition of the English and French colonies throughout the world. M. Manes, the Governor-General of Pondicherry, presided at the dinner, which was attended by seventy-two of the principal officials and inhabitants of Pondicherry.

ALTHOUGH considerable doubts were at first thrown on the discovery of kaolin or china clay at Whitefield in the Madras Presidency, all doubt is now dispelled. Messrs. Arbutnot and Co. have taken a lease of the property, having entered into a contract with the Telegraph Department for the supply of insulators. They have also engaged a trained potter from Bombay, who has already begun operations. It has been decided to remove the works from Whitefield to Avady, which is within easy reach of Madras and has a good water supply. The necessary machinery and plant have been ordered from England.

THE rat threatens to be as destructive in the Neilgherries as the rabbit is in Australia. The hills are overrun by them. The fields of the ryots are honeycombed by them. On estates hundreds of tea trees have been uprooted by them, and bushels of coffee may be gathered that has been picked by them. Growers of potatoes and vegetables have had their crops destroyed by them, and residents and visitors have experienced what a pest they have become in the houses. It is suggested that the breeding of such birds as the eagle, the hawk, and the owl, which prey upon rats, should be encouraged. At present the Neilgherries Game Association offers rewards for the destruction of such birds.

BOMBAY.

IT has been settled that the office of the Examiner of Marine Accounts will be permanently transferred to Bombay.

THE Income-tax Act has been extended to the Cantonments of Baroda, Neemuch, Nowgong, Mhow and Deesa, subject to certain modifications which are set forth in a notification which appears in the last issue of the Gazette of India.

MR. LEE-WARNER, Acting Secretary to Government in the Judicial, Political and Educational Departments, goes home on sick leave. Sir William Wedderburn, who is shortly expected to return from leave in England, will probably take up the appointment.

IT is understood that Sir Jamsetjee Jeejeebhoy proceeds to England on the 8th April in the s.s. Ganges. His Highness the Maharajah of Ojoch Behar has taken his passage by the same steamer.

THE Very Rev. B. Linden, S.J., who was at one time Superior of the Jesuit Fathers in Bombay, and lately Rector of St. Xavier's High School at Poona, is to be shortly consecrated as Bishop of the new diocese of Poona.

MR. CANDY, Judicial Commissioner in Sind, goes to England in April for a year. The acting appointment has been offered to Mr. Crowe, Acting District Judge of Poona.

THE Bombay Presidency season reports for the past week show that there was slight rain in the Shikarpore and Upper Sind Frontier districts. In several districts the standing crops were slightly damaged by blight and frost. Fever prevails in parts of eleven, cattle-disease in parts of often, and small-pox in parts of four districts.

NORTH-WEST PROVINCES, OUDH AND PUNJAB.

THE Municipality of Agra have made a free gift of a site, valued at Rs. 8,000, to the Agra Female Hospital, of which the foundation stone has been laid by Lady Lyall.

THE Punjab Revenue and Tenancy Bills are not likely to come before the Legislative Council during the Calcutta Session, but will probably be taken up and passed as soon as the Council reopens at Simla. Colonel Davies, the member in charge, is going on furlough this spring; but as he does not start until well on in April there will be time for a final consultation at Umballa as the Government goes up country, even if he is not able to rejoin the Council and see the measures through.

THE following gentlemen have been appointed Assistant Magistrates in the North-West Provinces under the Statute of 1870:—Pandit Ram Autar Pande, B.A., Deputy Collector and Personal Assistant to the Commissioner of Benares; Syed Habibullah, Barrister-at-Law, of Allahabad; and Syed Mahomed Ali, B.A., of Aligarh. Pandit Ram Autar is described as an officer of proved ability, and the two other gentlemen are said to have had an excellent English education, and belong to families of known standing and influence.

It is reported from Umballa that a serious affray took place between a couple of soldiers belonging to the Queen's Bays and some Native villagers. The two soldiers went out for purposes of sport, to a village called Shahpore, about eight or nine miles out on the Umballa-Delhi-road, and while there, shot a pigeon, a proceeding which appears to have given the villagers great offence, for they showed their resentment by mobbing and actually ill-treating the soldiers. It is said that in the struggle, the gun carried by one of the men accidentally went off, wounding a Native in the groin. The attack was altogether unprovoked. The soldiers were severely maltreated, and both of them are at present lying in hospital, owing to the serious injuries sustained.

The orders of the Secretary of State have been received with regard to Mr. G. E. Wakefield, Deputy Commissioner of Ludhiana, who attained the age of fifty-five last September, but was allowed to continue in the service, pending the result of his appeal to the Home authorities for an extension of service. Mr. Wakefield was, it appears, an Extra Assistant Commissioner at Peshawar at the time of the Mutiny, and was one of those who helped Edwardes, Nicholson, and the few resolute ones who maintained our authority there, when the position seemed so desperate that even John Lawrence, for once in his career, hesitated and gave counsel that might have led to the extinction of our power in India. For his services on that trying occasion, Mr. Wakefield was rewarded with an appointment in the Commission. "He is an officer of the old school," says the Lahore paper, "and governed his district well after the patriarchal fashion in vogue when 'equity, justice, and good conscience' rather than the strict letter of the law were the lights which guided Punjab officialdom. He was popular with the Natives, and carries with him into his retirement the good wishes of many. The times are changed since 1857; and the qualities which in the future seem likely to be regarded as the best title to advancement, are fluency in speech and writing, and a minute acquaintance with legal technicalities."

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

SURGEON-MAJOR W. J. WILSON and Surgeon R. J. D. Hall have been brought on the strength of the forces in the Bombay Command.

LIEUT. C. V. F. TOWNSEND, attached to the 3rd Sikhs, has been appointed a Squadron Officer in the 1st Regiment Central India Horse.

LIEUT. GEORGE BRODIE O'DONNELL, S.C., has been promoted on the completion of eleven years' service, four of which have been in the Staff Corps.

LIEUTENANT M. J. SHEWAN, Bombay Staff Corps, Wing Officer 4th Infantry, Hyderabad Contingent, has been granted furlough to Europe, on medical certificate, for one year.

COLONEL C. GRANT, Bombay Cavalry, has retired from the service on a pension of £622 per annum. Colonel Grant entered the army in 1837. Since July 10, 1883, he has officiated as Cantonment Magistrate at Neemuch.

The following stations have been transferred from the Mhow to the Presidency Circle for medical administrative purposes, with effect from 1st April, 1887:—Deesa, Ahmedabad, Mount Abu, Surat, Bhuj, Rajkot, Baroda, Sadra, Dwarka.

The appointment of Colonel W. R. Elles, C.B., to the Adjutant-Generalship of the Army in India, in succession to Major-General Sir T. D. Baker, K.C.B., who takes a Divisional command, is notified. At the time when Sir Thomas Baker became Adjutant in 1884, Colonel Elles ran him close.

GENERAL CHAPMAN, Quartermaster-General, who has just joined at Calcutta, will not start for Burma to join the Commander-in-Chief, but will take up his office duties at Headquarters. Sir T. Baker is not likely to assume the command at Allahabad for some weeks, as a good deal of work has to be done when the Commander-in-Chief and his Adjutant-General reach Fort William.

HIS EXCELLENCY THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF and Staff arrived in Calcutta, on their return from Burma, on the 10th of February. Captain C. V. Hume, one of the aides-de-camp, remains behind in Burma for a short time. His Excellency will probably arrive at Amballa about the 25th prox., and will remain in camp there for a week, according to present arrangements.

PRIVATE JOHN TREMBLE, of the 2nd Battalion Royal Irish Regiment, who was tried at Amballa in November by Mr. Justice Plowden, for murdering, at Sababthu, in May, Private Burns of the same regiment, has been convicted under section 304 of the Indian Penal Code, and sentenced by the Chief Court to ten years' rigorous imprisonment, commencing from the 15th November last. The case, it will be remembered, was reserved for hearing before a full Bench.

The Quartermaster-General in India has telegraphed to the General Officer Commanding Upper Burma Field Force:—"All men belonging to the corps and batteries returning from Burma to India who were detained for an extra year will be permitted to go home if they arrive in time for embarkation in the troopships sailing from Bombay on 19th March or 2nd April. As all details are usually kept ten days at Deolali for completion of documents, it is most desirable that all such men should be sent to India as soon as possible, without waiting to accompany their corps or batteries."

THE Army List, by the way, already shows the twentieth century in its columns, as the date on which Major O. M. O'neagh, V.C., commanding the Merwara Battalion, will vacate his command is entered at 1902.

THE current year will, for the Bengal Native Army, be remarkable for numerous vacancies in the commands of regiments. The seven years' rule regulating the tenure of command and the age limit of fifty-two will make themselves felt in a marked way. Thus the following officers vacate their commands:—Colonel Copland, of the 19th Punjab Infantry, on the 24th ult.; Lieutenant-Colonel Ross, 16th Bengal Cavalry, on 3rd March; Colonel Venour, 5th Bengal Infantry, on 25th March; Colonel Collis, 21st Punjab Infantry, on 27th April; Colonel R. Smith, 8th Bengal Infantry, on 29th April; Colonel Chowne, 2nd Punjab Infantry, on 1st June; Colonel Minto, 76th Bengal Infantry, on 24th June; Colonel R. D. Campbell, 30th Punjab Infantry, on 27th June; Colonel Justice, 6th Infantry, Hyderabad Contingent, on 1st July; Colonel Rutherford, 33rd Bengal Infantry, on 4th September; Colonel Chapman, 1st Bengal Cavalry, on 10th September; Colonel Baker, 2nd Bengal Infantry, on 20th September; Colonel Way, 3rd Infantry, Hyderabad Contingent, on 22nd October; Lieutenant-Colonel Fitzgerald, 17th Bengal Infantry, on 12th December; Colonel Battye, 1st Battalion 2nd Goorkhas, on 24th December; and Colonel Barnes, 10th Bengal Lancers, on 29th December. Of those sixteen commanding officers, seven (Colonels Copland, Venour, Collis, Smith, Chapman, Barnes, and Battye) come under the seven years' rule; and two (Colonels Ross and Fitzgerald) under the fifty-two years of age limit; Colonel Chowne vacates on attaining colonel's allowance; and the remainder have to go on attaining fifty-five years of age. There will be only seven vacancies next year, viz., 4th, 8th, and 17th Bengal Cavalry, 6th Bengal Infantry, 43rd Goorkha Light Infantry, 2nd Punjab Cavalry, and 1st Infantry, Hyderabad Contingent. In 1889 there will be only five vacancies, but 1890 will witness the retirement of no fewer than nineteen commandants. Even if there are no casualties or voluntary retirements, there will be a good flow of promotion in the Bengal Presidency during the next three or four years.

THE Civil and Military Gazette says:—"The particulars we gave, the other day, regarding the amalgamation of the supply and transport branches of the Commissariat Department may be regarded as the beginning of the end; the end, that is, or rather the collapse of the great Transport Department, inaugurated with such a flourishing of trumpets some few years ago. The present measure, indeed, practically amounts to a return to the old system which prevailed previous to 1830. Since then the Transport Department has grown into a huge monstrosity; a danger in war, and in time of peace something very like a curse to all concerned with it. Regimental and Staff officers and Generals commanding are all loud in its condemnation; as are also all civil officers affected by its ramifications. District officers, for instance, are always complaining of the confusion, difficulty and complication of the whole business; and a corps scarcely ever marches out of cantonments without having to complain that no transport has been provided till hours or even days after it is required. In Burma the defects of our system of transport have been painfully apparent."

IN order to celebrate "in the most lasting and public manner throughout the Indian Empire" the Queen's Jubilee certain members of the Bombay Corporation wish to suggest for the consideration of Government "the desirability of a special coin being minted and circulated this year, the value of such coin being two rupees and a half, the use of which in this country would, it is believed, be as useful and convenient to the public as the half-crown piece is in England."

THE SUSSEX MILITARY COLLEGE (LIMITED).—Wyberlye, Burgess Hill, appears as a candidate for public favour, and if the promises made in the prospectus be faithfully carried out it ought to obtain it. The institution has hitherto been very successfully worked as a private one by Mr. J. F. Cornish, F.R.G.S., who has during the last five years passed a great number of pupils into Sandhurst, Woolwich and the Civil Service. It has been arranged to retain his services on the Establishment for a further term of years as Managing-Director of the Company, of which Dr. Hayman, late Head Master of Rugby, is chairman. Educationally and financially, the new Military College ought to be a success.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

ENGLAND AND RUSSIA FACE TO FACE IN ASIA.*

This book is not pleasant reading. It tells a tale of Governmental folly, of confiding simplicity, and, as a result, of national humiliation, which will occasion a blush of shame upon the cheek of every patriot who loves his country. Some time since a pamphlet appeared, entitled "Why am I a Liberal." Putting the question in the negative instead of the positive form it would suffice to answer, "Because I have read 'England and Russia face to face in Asia'."—a book which reveals, on the testimony of an eye-witness, such an amount of hopeless incompetency, of criminal indifference, and of childish trust, that no person endowed with sense of discretion could possibly—apart from party bias—continue to place confidence in the author of such ill.

It is well, too, that the memory of the public should be refreshed in regard to the various incidents of the "misunderstanding" regarding the boundaries of Afghanistan. Let it not be supposed, however, that the term just quoted accurately describes the circumstances of the case. Russia—"Holy Russia"—understood from the first the rôle she was to play. Sir Peter Lumsden was to be kept dangling his heels till it suited the convenience of the Muscovite agent to put in an appearance. This insouciance, if it had no other effect, would at any rate display before the Natives the sight of England dancing to Russia's piping. Then every attempt was to be made to stir up the passions of the Afghans and induce them to commence the fray; and if this failed, owing in part to the williness of the dwellers in the "land of stones," and in part to the wise counsels of the English diplomatists, no thanks are due to the Czar's emissaries and soldiers who did all that becomes the powers of darkness, and were not rewarded with success.

But if a lingering favourable notion should remain in the heart of a solitary enthusiast deceived by the guile of those who turn their eyes to heaven and play the hypocrite, one would think that the veil would be torn aside by the circumstance that the Russian General Alikhanoff offered a reward of 400 roubles for the head of every English officer brought into the camp (p. 356). But it is now as it was 1600 years ago. Some people will not be persuaded, "though one rose from the dead!"

Thoughtful and observant readers also will find ample food for reflection in the various remarks made by Mr. Yate as to the political aspect of the "Boundary" Question. There is much shrewd common sense—not too common a ware in high places—regarding Kandahar, Herat, and Kabul, regarding the Turcomans, their value to England, and the means of utilising their services, regarding an alliance with Persia and Turkey against Russia; and, finally, regarding the Czar's aims and objects in the plains of Central Asia.

If, as we have said at the commencement of this review, a perusal of Mr. Yate's most valuable work will occasion reflections upon our rulers, it is far otherwise as regards the officers who, amidst unparalleled difficulties, deserted, too, by those who ought to have supported them with all the weight of an united nation, yet managed to emerge from the crisis with as much power as was possible under the humiliating surroundings of their position—their action is the antidote, the feebleness of their rulers the poison. This, at least, is a consolation, the only one to be found in the black catalogue of folly and insensate misjudgment which our author proclaims in sentences of withering scorn and contempt.

POEMS OF MADAME DE LA MOTHE GUYON.†

The poems of Madame de la Mothe Guyon have much to recommend them; their earnest piety, their zealous ardour, their trusting confidence. These, each and all, touch chords of sympathy in many a bosom; but the verse lacks the inspiration of genius, and why? Mainly because, written in French, it is given to the world in English, and even a Southey cannot transplant the delicate plant of poetry to a new soil. Like the "sensitive plant" in nature, which resents the least touch, the outpourings of the heart must be proclaimed in the language of the soul which feels, the bosom which burns. What would be the utterings of a "Havergal" if rendered in French? Criticism, therefore, from the standpoint of poetry, might perchance condemn; but viewed by the light of sincerity, purity, earnestness, and piety, this little volume should find a response in many a heart. It is honest; it is welcome.

TALES OF THE CALIPH.‡

Few characters in Eastern history are more familiar to English readers than the Caliph Harun Al Rashid, who was wont, in company with a faithful henchman, to wander the streets of Baghdad in search of adventures. Many of his doings in these strange journeys have been recorded for the edification of the public; but the supply is practically inexhaustible, inasmuch as imagination has free scope in a direction where there cannot by any possibility be a check upon truth. So "Al-Arawiyah" has added to the store with twelve more stories anent the "Commander of the Faithful." The adventures now recorded are interesting and attractive, the more so that they do not deal so largely in the marvellous, as is frequently the case in Oriental tales; but to not a few the account of the magic tube, which revealed to the astonished Caliph the events of future time, would better have been omitted. All the other stories might have been written hundreds of years ago, but this fiction could not have been penned prior to the discovery of steam and electricity—hence there is an air of unreality in the closing pages of a volume which has otherwise much to recommend it.

ALBUM OF INDIAN FERNS.*

It would not be possible to exaggerate the praise due to Mr. Baynes's "Album of Indian Ferns," reproduced in chromo lithography from original water-colour drawings; the plants seem to live again, so lifelike are they, so true to nature. As a work of art, and a handsome volume de luxe, this picturesque album might well find a place on the table of the salon, while, as a guide to the student of botany, it possesses charms which are not to be criticised by the canon of mere beauty.

"Darker than Night," by Henry Constable (J. and R. Maxwell), is a little shilling volume containing "A Weird Story," "A Sad Story," and "A Queer Story," all capably told by a writer who can hardly conceal his identity from Anglo-Indian readers under the name he has chosen to assume. The writing is powerful, the pathos natural, not artificial, and the book will do more than while away an idle hour; it will interest the reader and create a desire for further instalment from the same pen.

BOOKS FOR REVIEW.—"Modern Hinduism," by B. J. Wilkins (T. Fisher Unwin); "Royal Calendar and Index" (W. H. Allen and Co.); "Hazell's Annual Cyclopædia"; "Peggy: a Tale of the Irish Rebellion," by Mary Damant (W. H. Allen and Co.); "Through the Long Day," by Dr. Mackay (W. H. Allen and Co.).

POSTAGE RATES BETWEEN INDIA AND CEYLON.—It has been a standing grievance for a long time past that, while one may send a letter for half an anna from Peshawar to Cochin, or from Burma to Bagdad, it costs four and six times as much to have it conveyed over the small strip of sea which separates India from Ceylon. Added to this, the exasperating irregularity with which correspondence has hitherto been transmitted from the island to the mainland has been an unceasing source of complaint. However, these inconveniences are now to cease. An arrangement has been come to between the Ceylon and Indian Post Offices whereby correspondence may be exchanged between the two countries at the ordinary inland postage rates prevailing in either country. Thus a half-tola letter may be forwarded from any Indian post-office to Ceylon for half an anna; and similar rates apply to newspapers, packets, and the like. This concession applies to correspondence forwarded by the daily "land post" service and catamaran ferry between Point Calimere and Kankasanturai, and also to correspondence forwarded by the weekly steamers of the British India Steam Navigation Company connecting Tuticorin with Colombo. The only condition insisted upon is the compulsory prepayment of postage on all articles forwarded by these routes. The transmission of correspondence by means of the P. and O. and French mail steamers will continue to be governed by the existing rules, and unpaid or insufficiently-paid articles will be sent by these vessels only. This lowering of the postage rates between India and Ceylon is an undoubted boon for which all classes of the public have reason to be grateful to the Postal authorities. It will be especially appreciated by the poorer classes of Natives in Southern India who have extensive connections with Ceylon, whither their brethren migrate in vast numbers. It is upon these people that the high postage rates hitherto prevailing have pressed most heavily; so much so that an illicit trade in the cheap conveyance of letters by means of Native craft plying between Ceylon and India has long been carried on with success. The Post Office money-order system has already proved an inestimable benefit to the labouring classes in Southern India and Ceylon, enabling them as it does to remit small sums safely and cheaply. The further concession now granted will be widely appreciated, and is sure to develop correspondence between the two countries to a large extent. It may be as well to add here, what is not perhaps generally known, that, under recent arrangements made by the Indian Post Office, there is now a regular weekly steamer service between Tuticorin and Colombo by means of the vessels of the British India Steam Navigation Company. This weekly service will, in the course of time, prove of considerable utility, not only for the conveyance of mails, but also for passenger traffic between Ceylon and Southern India, since it affords an easy means of getting a few days' holiday trip to Ceylon.—Pioneer.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 21, 1887.

THE JUBILEE IN INDIA.

THROUGHOUT the length and breadth of British India, throughout all the Native States, and as far away as Mandalay in Upper Burma, the Jubilee of Queen Victoria has been celebrated with all magnificent display and ceremony. Only those who have been in Eastern lands can realise how grand and gorgeous the ceremonials have been in the cities where there has been no stint of money or labour in order to produce effects which delight Oriental eyes and are dear to Oriental natures. A tamasha is always a thing of beauty and a joy for ever to the Native of India, whether he be prince or peasant. His soul goes out in gladness to a holiday, and his spirit rejoices in fireworks and illuminations. On such an occasion as the present, when the cause of the rejoicing was one loyal expression of devotion to the Kaisar-i-Hind, in which the Government took the lead, the result could have been no other than the unanimous outburst of popular enthusiasm which the telegrams from India have recorded. All India has been en fête, and everything has been done everywhere throughout the land to render the year of Jubilee one to be remembered. It has been said, and said truly, that one hundred years is too brief an epoch in a nation's history for the purpose of commenting upon its growth or of attempting to forecast its destiny; but little more than one hundred years have elapsed since Warren Hastings, in vindicating his action for extending British power to a limited extent in Bengal, wrote of the growth of the East India Company :—

The seed of this wonderful production was sown by the hand of calamity. It was nourished by fortune and cultivated and shaped by necessity. Its first existence was commercial: it obtained in its growth the sudden accession of military strength and territorial dominion to which its political adjunct was inevitable. It is useless to inquire whether the Company or the nation has derived any substantial benefit from the change, since it is impossible to retrace the perilous and wonderful paths by which they have attained their present elevation, and to redescend to the humble and undreaded character of trading adventurers. Perhaps the term of the national existence in India may become susceptible of a shorter duration by it; but it is that state which it must henceforth maintain, and it must, therefore, adopt those principles which are necessary to its preservation in that state. I much fear that it is not understood as it ought to be how near the Company's existence has on many occasions vibrated to the edge of perdition, and that it has been at all times suspended by a thread so fine that the touch of chance might break or the breath of public opinion dissolve it: and instantaneous will be its fall whenever it shall happen. May God in his mercy long avert it!

If the great Pro-Consul could have stepped as a living man out of the frame which encloses his picture in the Council Chamber of Government House, Calcutta, on the 16th February, 1887, he would have had good cause to marvel at the apology which he wrote on the 14th January, 1786. Yet in his apology there is something of a prophecy, for he believed in the extending influence of Englishmen in India, and although he wavered he never doubted. He felt that his country had the destinies of India in her keeping. How she has fulfilled that trust the story of to-day tells. The rejoicings of the multitudes, the processions, the addresses, all the glitter of the displays by day and night may be considered, if a cynic chooses to think so, of little account—being the necessary accessories to a tamasha—fireworks and nothing more. But there is much more to be thought of. When Warren Hastings wrote every region of Hindustan outside of Bengal “groaned under different degrees of oppression, desolation, and insecurity,” and even in Bengal a famine had just ended, “the remembrance of which yet dwelt on the minds of the inhabitants with every impression of horror and apprehension.” These are Warren Hastings' own words. To-day Lord Dufferin, speaking of India from Cape Comorin to the Himalayas, is able to say, “The last half-century has endowed the land with peace, has brought justice to every door, has bridged floods and pierced jungles, has converted millions of barren acres into well-watered plains, has diminished the risks of famine and pestilence, and has placed Western learning and science within the reach of the humblest.” These are no small triumphs to boast of, even if they had been won only after centuries of toil and trial. But that they should have been won within the memory of living man is the proudest tribute which history can pay to the worth of British rule in the East.

But it is to be hoped that the Jubilee rejoicings will not be remembered as a mere holiday display, but as the occasion upon which fresh and permanent benefits were introduced for the benefit of the peoples of India. It would be foolishly sanguine to believe that there has yet been any breaking down of all the barriers which are between Mahomedans and Hindus, and between both and their Christian rulers, but a step has been taken towards creating a better understanding, a kindlier feeling, between the rulers and the ruled. In the speeches delivered by the Viceroy, by the Governors of Madras and Bombay, and by all the representative English officials who addressed Native audiences throughout India on this occasion, the point most insisted upon was the assurance of England's real and warm interest in, and sympathy with, India. In his address at a preliminary meeting regarding the Jubilee arrangements for Calcutta, Dr. W. Hunter reminded his hearers that England and India have conjointly at this moment a unique opportunity. India has the cheapest labour in the world, England the cheapest capital. He would have India take a new industrial place in the world. “She appears no longer as a retailer of luxuries which only the rich could afford to buy, but as a wholesale producer of staples, of the crops which they feed and of the fabrics which will yet clothe other nations. In 1837 India exported about ten millions sterling worth of luxuries, for which she could generally get her own price. In 1887 India will export ninety millions worth of staples, but she will have to compete with the whole world, from California to China, in finding a market. This great industrial revolution has taken place in India during the reign of Queen Victoria. It implies changes in the working life of the people which are felt for evil or for good in every homestead throughout this vast land." To meet this new situation the speaker insisted upon the necessity of technical education being encouraged, in order to enable India to hold a commanding place in the industrial world, and so reap victories of peace more renowned than war. He looked upon the Jubilee occasion as a providential opportunity for directing a portion of the national wealth to a permanent means of national progress:—

Illuminations, statues, memorial buildings, the feeding of the poor, are each and all fitting expressions of the glad heart of the people. But to enable India to worthily fill the new place which she has won in the industrial world during Queen Victoria's reign seems to my mind one of the noblest purposes to which the thank-offerings of a grateful nation can be devoted, for the last illumination will sputter out into darkness, and time will lay its defacing finger on the marble and the bronze. But the education of the people has within itself an inherent life which can never perish, and which will throw out new and ampler growths from generation to generation.

The Jubilee Year of Queen Victoria's reign finds India to-day far so advanced in peace and prosperity that new hopes and aspirations have been awakened pointing to further progress—before another fifty years have elapsed those hopes (which are no Utopian dreams) may be more than realised. So mote it be!

THE ORDER OF THE INDIAN EMPIRE.

The Gazette of Tuesday night publishes the following Royal Warrant, dated India Office, February 15th, 1887:—The Queen, taking into her Royal consideration the expediency of making certain changes in the constitution of the Order of the Indian Empire, as well by altering the designation of the Order as by adding thereto an additional class, so as to enable Her Majesty, her Heirs and Successors, to reward a greater number of persons who, by their services, official or other, to Her Majesty's Indian Empire, have merited the Royal favour, has been graciously pleased by Letters Patent under the Great Seal of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, bearing date the second day of August last, to revoke and abrogate so much of the Royal Warrant bearing date the thirty-first day of December, one thousand eight hundred and seventy-seven, by which the said Order was instituted, as limits the same to the Sovereign, a Grand Master, and one class of Members or Companions, and as is inconsistent with or contrary to the provisions of the now recited Letters Patent.

And to ordain, direct, and appoint that the said Order of Knighthood shall henceforth be styled and designated in all acts, proceedings, and pleadings as "The Most Eminent Order of the Indian Empire."

And to ordain, direct, and appoint that the said Order shall consist of the Sovereign and a Grand Master and such Ordinary Companions or Members, to be divided into two classes, together with such Extra and Honorary Members as Her Majesty, her heirs and successors, shall from time to time appoint.

And to ordain, direct, and appoint that Her Majesty, her heirs and successors, Kings or Queens Regnant of the said United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, Emperors and Empresses of India, shall be successively the Sovereign of the said Order, and that the Viceroy and Governor-General of India for the time being shall be Grand Master of the said Order, and shall in virtue thereof be the First and Principal Knight Commander of the Order.

And to ordain, direct, and appoint that the said members shall be divided into two classes, and that the first or higher of the two classes shall be composed of fifty members, to be styled and designated Knights Commanders of the said Order, and that the second or lower class shall consist of such members as Her Majesty, her heirs and successors, shall appoint, to be styled and designated Companions of the said Order: Provided, nevertheless, and the Queen thereby ordained, directed, and appointed, that it should be competent for Her Majesty, her heirs and successors, to appoint at her or their pleasure any Princes of the Blood Royal, being descendants of his late Majesty King George I., as Extra Knights Commanders.

And to ordain, declare, and appoint that in all solemn ceremonies, and in all places and assemblies, the Knights Commanders of this Order shall have place and precedence next to and immediately after the Knights Commanders of the Most Distinguished Order of Saint Michael and St. George, and that the Companions of this Order shall have place and precedence next to and immediately after the Companions of the said Most Distinguished Order of Saint Michael and Saint George.

And to ordain, direct, and appoint that the said Order shall continue to be governed by Statutes and Ordinances to be from time to time made and ordained by Her Majesty, her heirs and successors, Sovereigns of the same.

In pursuance of the power so vested in the Queen as Sovereign of the Most Eminent Order of the Indian Empire, Her Majesty has also been pleased to issue new statutes for the government of the said Order, and therein to ordain, direct and appoint that it shall be competent for the Sovereign of the said Order to confer the dignity of a Knight Commander upon such persons who, by their services, official or other, to Her Majesty's Empire in India, have merited the Royal favour, and upon such distinguished representatives of Eastern potentates as Her Majesty, her heirs and successors, may think fit, and the dignity of Companion of this Order on such persons as would, according to the before-recited provisions, be qualified for being nominated to the First Class, or Knights Commanders of the said Order.

"DISTINGUISHED ANGLO-INDIANS."

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—I regret to think that the notice of my book in your last issue tends to mislead the public by giving an erroneous idea of its purpose and contents. The able but rather self-satisfied critic might have avoided this error by a more careful perusal of the two prefaces; and, as your journal is so widely circulated among Anglo-Indians—from whom I must expect the chief patronage to my work—I would respectfully beg leave to make a few remarks for their sake and my own. After graciously admitting—as has been already done by some great authorities—that the "enlargement" has "added considerably to the value of the original work," it is stated that some of the memoirs are "too short," and that others should not have been inserted at all. The first objection may be easily disposed of by enlarging on the famous remark of William Pitt to a Member of Parliament, that where there was little or no material, or little or nothing to say, it was well to say little or nothing! In the present work, doubtless, two or three of the sketches are brief; but I gave all there was to say from the scanty materials afforded, without furnishing "airy nothings" of my own creation, as is too often the fashion in this wordy age. And these two or three meritorious Anglo-Indians could not with any justice have been omitted. On the first page of the "Original Preface"—showing the design of the work—it is written regarding the subjects of the "sketches":—"They are more or less distinguished; but there is certainly a goodly array." The "more or less" is simply a matter of opinion; and no one will deny that great actions have often been performed by men who have not yet gained the summit of "the steep where Fame's proud temple shines afar."

Immediately after the prospectus of my book appeared it was observed: "There are many Anglo-Indians omitted who should have been sketched in your pages." Very true. But if the friends of these Anglo-Indian historic worthies will only send in materials, why should there not be a second series of "Distinguished Anglo-Indians"? Twelve years ago, when the first eleven or twelve sketches appeared, as will be seen at the end of my new volume, they were highly commended; and it was not remarked that any of them should have been omitted. I presume to think there would be less cause for any omission now; and I would only like to add to the number of "mighty men" I have brought forward in the second instalment.

Your discerning critic asks: "What has Pollock's funeral to do with Sir Henry Lawrence's career?" Early in the "Biographical Study" it is alluded to incidentally, as both the renowned field-marshal and Sir Henry were Bengal Artillerymen. Sir George Pollock, as stated, belonging also to a family which carried out Bacon's fine expression of "achieving greatness"; and distinguished Indian artillerymen were among the pall-bearers. Lord Lawrence, Sir Henry's brother, who saved the Punjab, was also at this imposing funeral; and, therefore, it was right to notice it. In the new preface it is distinctly stated that where a memoir or a biography of a distinguished Anglo-Indian has appeared, he is omitted, as a rule, from the "Sketches." Then why the remark that the venerable field-marshal who revenged Cibal deserves "more than a cutting from the Broad Arrow." This article on Sir George's career is given in Appendix IV., simply to act as a key to the "Lines" on the field-marshal's funeral, at which I had the honour to be present. The Life of Sir George Pollock, by Mr. C. R. Low, was published by Messrs. W. H. Allen and Co. in 1873, in which ample justice is done to the "venerable field-marshal."

What need I say more, except, perhaps, that a critic should be impartial and well-informed?—and it is well to bear in mind the concluding words of the famous Junius in his last letter, that, "really to inform the understanding, corrects and enlarges the heart."—I remain, sir, yours very faithfully, London, Feb. 16.

OBITUARY.

MR. FRANCIS BARROW.—The Calcutta papers announce the death of Mr. Francis Barrow, of Messrs. Barrow and Orr, solicitors of that city. Mr. Barrow's connection with Calcutta extends over a period of nearly forty years, and it must be nearly twenty years since he retired from business in India. Mr. Barrow came out again some sixteen years since to establish the Positive Life Assurance Company, which he had previously assisted to establish in the dominion of Canada. After starting the Company in India he returned home only to come out shortly afterwards to again take up the practice of his profession in Calcutta, where he found many old friends, and soon made many new ones. Mr. Barrow's health broke down some three months since, and for a time his life was despaired of, but he rallied and was sent down to Ceylon in the hope that the sea voyage and the mild air at Mount Lavinia would complete the cure. For the first fortnight this seemed likely, but within the last few days a change for the worse set in, and he rapidly sank, dying on Saturday morning, January 29.

SECRETARY (pro tem.)—Mr. GEORGE CROOK.

ARCHITECT—WOODMAN DICKSON, Esq., 30, Margaret Street, Cavendish Square, W.

OFFICES—58, Ship Street, Brighton.

This Company has been formed for the purpose of taking over and extending the present establishment at Burgess Hill, known as "Wyberlye," and hitherto successfully conducted by Mr. J. F. Cornish, F.R.G.S.

It is proposed that the number of pupils at the Sussex Military College shall be invariably and strictly limited, to ensure that necessary undivided attention to every boy which is neglected by existing military colleges. There will still be a sufficient number to admit a healthy rivalry, both physical and mental.

The house and grounds which the Company propose to purchase and to adopt for this scheme are situate at Wyberlye, Burgess Hill, consisting of a freehold estate, which contains six acres of land, and is of a rental value of £300 a year. The freehold can be purchased for £8,000. More than £10,000 has been laid out on the house and grounds by the late owner, and it has been lately valued at £7,250. The house, which is large, handsome, and substantially built, lends itself easily to alteration, and at a moderate cost additional buildings can be erected to accommodate at least 40 pupils and full staff under the same roof, and this without inter- fering with the residential character and appearance of the house.

The nominal capital of the Company is £20,000 in 2,000 shares of £10 each, but it is estimated that £10,000 will amply suffice for all purposes of purchase and conversion, and will leave a sufficient working capital in hand, as £5,000 can easily be obtained on mortgage.

Arrangements have been made to retain the services of Mr. Cornish on the establishment for a term of seven years. During the past scholastic year, of 16 entries for various competitions, 14 candidates were successful.

The purchase of the goodwill has been fixed at £2,000, of which Mr. Cornish has consented to take half in fully paid-up shares. The school furniture and fixtures will be taken at a value of £200.

The books have been examined by Edmonds, Clark, and Co., and it is estimated that 40 pupils at 60 guineas a term will give a balance of nearly £5,000 for distribu- tion amongst the shareholders, being over 20 per cent. on paid-up capital.

Taking a minimum average of 25 boys, £0 per cent. would be paid as a dividend.

Prospectuses and forms of application for shares can be obtained of the Company's Bankers, London and County Bank (Brighton Branch), and at the Registered Offices of the Company, No. 58, Ship Street, Brighton. Where no allotment is made, the amount paid on appli- cation will be returned in full.

ST. THOMAS'S HOSPITAL.— PAYING PATIENTS' DEPARTMENT.

OPINIONS.

The Calcutta Review for October reached us a day or two ago, and a glance at its contents shows that the number more than sustains the reputation which this old and favourite publication is again achieving. The Review is rapidly regaining the position which it . . . there is no fear of the Indian Review, or the Asiatic Quarterly rivalling it in public favour.—Statesman, October, 1886.

. . . The best service which I ever rendered in India, or, indeed, for India, was the establishment, single- handed, of the Calcutta Review, which has done far more for Indian literature than anything I have written under my own name.—J. W. KAYS, Athenæum Club, June 23, 1872.

The Calcutta Review has given us valuable articles on the army. Some from the pen of Sir Henry Lawrence, who wrote with the spirit of prophecy, of the coming storm of which he was one of the noblest victims.—Address of the C.-in-C. at the U.S. Inst. of India.

. . . The Calcutta Review has not only throughout its career reflected the highest honour on its public-spirited promoters and its well-known distinguished contri- butors, but has done much to help forward the recon- struction of our system of governing India.—Westminster Review.

NAVAL AND MILITARY GAZETTE.

ESTABLISHED 1833.

EVERY SATURDAY. PRICE SIXPENCE.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" has acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelli- gence as to Appointments and other service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent course of its staff of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A series of Illustrated Articles is appear- ing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illus- trations with descriptions are also given of new Service Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" freely opens its correspondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for interchange of opinion is afforded, such as is offered by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supple- ments."

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" circulates largely throughout India and the Colonies. It is supplied direct to the Army and Marine bureaux of the French, Russian, and other Governments, and it is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Services, especially of the German, French, and American Armies, who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE

COUGHS, COLDS, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—Dr. J. O. BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff) discovered a REMEDY to denote which he coined the word CHLORODYNE. Dr. Browne is the SOLE INVENTOR, and, as the composition of Chlorodyne cannot possibly be discovered by Analysis (organic substances defying elimination), and since the formula has never been published, it is evident that a compound is identical with Dr. Browne's Chlorodyne must be false.

This system is necessary, as many persons have purchased by false representations.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—Vice Chancellor Sir W. PAGE WOOD stated publicly in Court that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was UNDOUBTEDLY the INVENTOR of CHLORODYNE, that the whole story of the defendant Freeman was deliberately untrue, and he regretted to say it had been sworn to.—See The Times, July 18th 1884.

DIARRHŒA, DYSENTERY. GENERAL BOARD OF HEALTH, London, REPORT that it ACTS as a CHARM, one dose generally sufficient. Dr. GIBBON, Army Medical Staff, Calcutta, states: "2 DOSES COMPLETELY CURED ME OF DIARRHŒA."

From Stevens & Co., Pharmaceutical Chemists, Simla, Jan. 5, 1880.

DEAR SIR.—We congratulate you upon the widespread reputation this justly-esteemed medicine has earned for itself all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances ad infinitum of the extraordinary efficacy of DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE in Diarrhœa and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia, the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Choleraic Diarrhœa, and even in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power.

We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's, from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist to prescribe and patient alike.—We are, Sir, faithfully yours, SYMES & CO., Members of the Pharm. Society of Great Britain, His Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is the TRUE PALLIATIVE in NEURALGIA, GOUT, CANCER, TOOTHACHE, RHEUMATISM.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 21, 1887.

General Intelligence.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 11th February; from Allahabad and Madras to the 9th February; and from Calcutta to the 8th February.

THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT has returned from his tour in the northern districts. He has inspected the troops in garrison in Bombay, and has been entertained at a banquet at the Byculla Club. His Royal Highness has since been to Deolali to inspect the troops there.

A GOVERNMENT Commission is sitting at Ahmedabad to inquire into charges preferred by Mr. Shamrao N. Laud, Dewan of Cambay, against Mr. G. H. D. Wilson, Political Agent for the State, who is alleged to have made indecent proposals to Mr. Shamrao in regard to his daughter. The theory put forward by the defence is that the whole thing is a conspiracy.

DACOITY is still prevalent in several districts in Burma. Captain Gubbin's camp at Naungum, near Wunthoo, has been attacked at night by a band of between 300 and 400 dacoits. The attack was repulsed, but not before several casualties had occurred on our side.

LIEUT. ARMYTAGE, patrolling near Myagoucha, in the Minbu district, has encountered a gang of dacoits and defeated them with heavy loss. He took forty-six prisoners, among whom were five boys.

CAPTAIN VAUGHAN, 6th Punjab Infantry, Commanding at Hyaunhyat, has been murdered half a mile from the Ava fort.

THERE are, it appears, two Bo-Shwes in the field, and unfortunately the one recently captured is not the man who has given so much trouble about Minhla. The Bo taken is named Shwe Hwan, and he was secured by Lieut. Crealock north-east of Myotha, in the Ava district.

It is understood that the Field Force will not leave Burma so early as was arranged, on account of the great expense involved in taking up tonnage for the transport of so large a force at once.

GOVERNMENT has decided to spread the return of the troops over a period extending to the end of April. This will bring the movement to about the end of the Rangoon summer, as the rains there set in about the beginning of May.

THE troopship Jumna has been taken off the home troop-ing service in order to be employed between Rangoon and Calcutta.

CONSIDERABLE activity prevails at Jellalabad. Some movement is expected either against the eastern borders of Kuner or southwards against the Shinwaris.

THE new Governor of Herat has left Kabul for his post; and Saydar Abdulla Khan, ruler of Badakhshan, has been ordered to Kabul on duty.

A DISTURBANCE that may develop into an affair of some consequence is reported from the Afghan frontier. It seems that on the 22nd of last month the Turi Khel and Ghilz is raided down the Thul valley to attack their old enemies the Waziris, and did so with great effect. The Waziris admit that fifty of their men were killed, several wounded, some villages destroyed, and considerable plunder taken off.

THE Waziris are now preparing reprisals on the Ghilzais, and it is stated that 400 Waziri coolies, who were employed on the foundations of the new bridge over the Curram at Bannu, have gone off to the hills to join the hue-and-cry.

THE Bonerwal Jirga have made an unconditional submission, and surrendered the arms seized in their raid on Perzai. They have also paid the fine imposed on them last March, and an additional fine for contumacy. The blockade will now be raised, and the Bonerwal prisoners released.

LORD REAY, accompanied by Lord Rosebery and Lord Fife, has, been on a private visit to Goa and Rutnagherry in H.M.S. Bacchante.

AMONG the witnesses likely to be examined by the Public Service Commission in Calcutta are Sir Comer Petheram, the Chief Justice, and one or two other Judges of the High Court.

THE Governments of India will leave Calcutta somewhat earlier than usual this season, March 19th having been fixed upon as the date for closing the offices.

THE issue of the Budget this year will probably be about the date of the closing of the offices at Calcutta. The formal notification of the economies effected, and likely to be effected, by the Finance Commission will, it is supposed, then be made.

IN the Budget for the year 1887-88 the Madras Government estimate the cost of the movement of the Government offices to and from the hills at Rs. 28,750, but it is not stated whether this includes the travelling expenses of the Governor, the members of Council, and other high officials.

THE rate of exchange for the adjustment of financial transactions between the British and Indian Governments is fixed at ls. 6d. for the year 1887-88.

THE arrangements in respect of the Punjab Land Bills have, it is understood, been modified. Colonel Davies, who was in charge of the Bills, will, after all, join the Council at Calcutta towards the end of the current month, and the Select Committee will sit there to complete their work. The Legislative Council will meet at Umballa about March 28th, so as to enable Sir Charles Aitchison to attend, and the Bills will then be passed into law.

THE Indian Marine Bill has been referred to a select committee, consisting of Hon. Messrs. Peile, Scoble, Whiteside, and Major-General Chesney.

THE Karachi Port Trust Act has received the assent of the Viceroy.

MR. JUSTICE NORRIS has cancelled his year's furlough, and will return from England to resume his duties in the Calcutta High Court on the 21st prox., that being the date on which Mr. Justice Cunningham takes furlough.

THE HON. JUSTICE OLDFIELD, father of the Civil Service and Senior Civilian Judge of the N.W.P. High Court, leaves India on retirement on the 3rd March, and proceeds home by China, Japan, and San Francisco. It is understood that Mr. Syed Mahmood will succeed to the vacancy.

GENERAL HANCOCK succeeds Colonel Trevor as Secretary to the Government of India in the Public Works Department, while Colonel Pemberton becomes Director-General of Railways.

MR. W. H. RATIGAN, D.C.L., has been appointed Vice-Chancellor of the Punjab University, in succession to Mr. G. R. Elsmie, C.S., whose two years' term has expired.

MR. A. W. CROFT, Director of Public Instruction in Bengal, and Mohendra Lall Sirkar are about to be appointed to the Legislative Council of Bengal.

SIR RIVERS THOMPSON will be entertained at a service dinner in Calcutta in April by his fellow-civilians in Bengal.

THE total capital required for the Bengal-Nagpore Railway, including the cost of purchasing from Government the existing narrow gauge section, is 650 lakhs; but it will only be necessary to raise a portion of this at once.

CAPTAIN DALBIAC, Royal Horse Artillery, who lately met with a serious accident while racing, has been recommended for leave to England by a medical board at Umballa.

THE Simla Bank Corporation, Limited, has suspended payment, and will go into voluntary liquidation. It is believed that the depositors will be paid in full. The event has been for some time expected.

THE annual income of the Bengal Asiatic Society now covers the ordinary expenditure, and a sum of Rs. 1,42,000 has been invested, Rs. 1,20,000 forming a close reserve fund, and the balance being available for extraordinary expenditure.

THE death of Mr. Joseph Sladen, District and Sessions Judge of Bareilly, from abscess of the liver, is announced. Mr. Sladen joined the Service in 1856, and had completed his residential term of twenty-three years.

NEWS has been received of the death at sea of Mr. Edward Stack, of the Bengal Civil Service.

It is reported as being no longer a secret that, owing to the arrears into which the Punjab Government has allowed the revision of its Land Revenue Settlement to fall, it has sacrificed about sixteen lakhs of revenue. This is said to be the explanation of the apparent severity of the Finance Committee in dealing with expenditure in that province.

MR. PARSONS, District Judge of Tanna, is appointed Judicial Commissioner in Sind.

MR. J. J. ALLEN, Government Telegraph Department, has, it is stated, successfully established quadruplex working on the telegraph line between Bombay and Madras, via Bellary.

Notes of the Week.

THE news from India brought by the present Overland Mail continues to be chiefly concerning the Jubilee celebrations which were to take place on the 16th and 17th February, the full account of which has already been published. Patna appears to have done the most practical thing in the matter of a Jubilee Memorial by the foundation of an industrial school. It is stated that this idea was first mooted on the occasion of the Prince of Wales's visit to that city, but the suggestion was made years before by Mr. William Tayler, who elaborated a most comprehensive plan of technical education which fell through for reasons which are given in that gentleman's very interesting autobiography.

SIMLA stands where it did, and the much-condemned official exodus thither is to take place this year as usual—only earlier. The Viceroy is expected at Peterhoff about the middle of April. Lord Dufferin's health has been considerably tried in the plains and in Burma, and the sooner he gets into the bracing atmosphere of the Himalayas the better for himself and for the public business.

It is currently reported in India that the Duke of Connaught will return to England to take part in the Jubilee celebrations here. We gave this information some months ago, although some of our contemporaries were polite enough to contradict it. The rumour in Bombay is that his Royal Highness will be absent from his command for about four months, when he will return to carry out his tenure of office. It is on the cards that he does not return to India at all, in which case the opportunity will be afforded of carrying out the often-suggested arrangement of abolishing the Presidency Commander-in-Chiefships.

WRITING of the nomination of Mr. Lyall to the Governorship of the Punjab the Pioneer says that it may be pretty safely concluded that of the Viceroy's three nominations for that province, Sir Charles Bernard was unacceptable to the India Office, and Sir Lepel Griffin to the Viceroy, and that Mr. Lyall was finally agreed upon as a mutually satisfactory compromise. Very likely; but it is hardly complimentary to the new Lieutenant-Governor to add, "The outcome of such a process might easily have been worse."

THE remark, however, is not intended to be read except as a compliment, for our contemporary allows that "Mr. Lyall is a shrewd, sensible, industrious man of courteous manners and kindly nature, and popular with his colleagues," and that "in that coming conflict with Russia, in which the Punjab must be so deeply concerned, the ruler who, if he have convictions, will readily subordinate them to the will of the paramount authority will best fit the occasion." This, after all, may be the real reason of the nomination.

THE general gaol delivery throughout India on the Jubilee day has exercised the ingenuity of members of Parliament and of the Press in a very remarkable manner, and even Lord Derby has failed to understand the meaning of the compliment to Her Majesty. Eloquent paragraphs have been written and speeches made to show the danger incurred of letting loose several thousands of convicted felons upon an innocent population, and the terrible question has been asked—"What would happen in England were such a thing done?" Something very remarkable, no doubt; but honourable Members and philanthropists may make their minds easy about the effect of the measure in India. A writer who has evidently sojourned in that country explains the situation correctly.

HERE is the explanation:—"When Bill Sykes heard the other day that 25,000 criminals had been released from gaol in India, as a compliment to Her Majesty's Jubilee, he probably gave his dog an extra kick, and muttered an extra curse at his own bad luck in not having had his lines cast in such a pleasant place as sunny India. But Bill does not know what all Anglo-Indians know—that no greater calamity can fall upon a Native criminal than to be turned out of an Indian gaol. The gaol is a haven to which he always sets sail when burglary, or perjury, or murder, or any other of his idiosyncracies becomes monotonous or unprofitable. It is his Ithaca, and, if he does not reach it over summer seas, it is a delightful Ithaca when he does. There he is taken every care of, fed, clothed, and allowed to do much as he likes, so long as he does not get sick or decrease in weight. If he does these he brings down the wrath of the Government of India upon the surgeon and superintendent of the gaol, who are responsible for his appearance and cheerfulness. He is seldom so ungrateful as to do this, and, consequently, as long as he honours prison with his presence, his stay is made as agreeable for him as European attention and the local municipal funds will allow. To be turned out of gaol is not only a disgrace—it is a misfortune to him."

TOUCHING upon the same subject a military contemporary makes a good suggestion as follows:—"There is a direction in which the Royal clemency has not extended, but might do so without running any risk of censure or other consequences. Would it not be possible to show some forgiveness towards a few of those foolish young soldiers who, tried in India for some hasty act of 'insubordination, accompanied with violence towards a superior officer,' are now undergoing at home the terrible punishment of years of penal servitude, according to the sentences passed by courts martial? Insubordination towards a superior officer is, of course, one of the gravest of military crimes, but in many cases the superior officer was simply a lance-corporal, who the day before might have been 'hail fellow, well met' with the private whom he placed under arrest the day following. Some free-and-easy chaff in a barrack-room, followed by a hasty word and then a blow, has been too often the programme leading to a general court-martial, and a sentence of five years' penal servitude on the private for striking the lance-corporal, his quondam friend and comrade of yesterday. The court had not the power given to it to decree a slighter punishment if the verdict was guilty. Some Member of Parliament might call for a return showing the number of cases of this kind during the rule of the several Commanders-in-Chief since the close of the Mutiny. It would be found to be a very melancholy record."

THIS is a matter worth considering. The severe sentences have been going on since the Mutiny time, but the contemporary quoted vindicates the memory of the late Lord Strathnairn from the charge which we have heard brought unjustly against him of having been the adviser of the heavy penal servitude penalties:—"The blame for the severity of the sentences has been often, but unjustly, laid upon the late Lord Strathnairn, who, as Sir Hugh Rose and Chief of the Armies of India, was considered by many to be a martinet of the old school. But he was nothing of the sort, and no better friend to the soldier ever commanded men. That he was a strict disciplinarian is true, but he had, it must be remembered, a terrible task to perform after the mutiny of the Native troops had been put down—the task of stamping out an attempt at mutiny on the part of the European soldiers of the old Company's Army. He succeeded, but he had to have one offender shot and several others sentenced to long periods of penal servitude before discipline was re-established. Severe sentences for insubordination had then to be enforced. But better times have come, and, without any weakening of the reins of authority, it would surely be possible to reconsider the cases of some of the unfortunates in question who are now undergoing heavy punishment for hasty acts, taking each case, of course, upon its merits."

THE COUNTESS OF DUFFERIN'S Jubilee fund in aid of the National Association for supplying Female Medical Aid to the Women of India is, we are glad to see, receiving wide and liberal support in India, and it is to be hoped it will be generously aided in England also. No more deserving cause has ever made an appeal to human sympathies than this, and the raising of an ample fund to carry out the intentions of the scheme will be, perhaps, the noblest Jubilee memorial of the year. We would remind our lady readers who are willing to become collectors of the sum of £5 or upwards that they can obtain a specially designed collecting card for the purpose on application to Demetrius Boulger, Esq., 46, Edwardes-square, Kensington, W.

WHAT has been done, asks the Lahore paper, to suppress the glaring scandal of purchasing Government stores through the India Office? During the first eight months of the current official year over 289 lakhs worth of stores were imported by Government from England; including 21 lakhs worth of apparel, nearly 5 lakhs worth of hardware and cutlery, 4½ lakhs worth of leather and leather manufactures, nearly 3 lakhs worth of stationery, 9½ lakhs worth of woollen piece-goods, and over 5½ lakhs worth of material for telegraph construction, to say nothing of all sorts of machinery and iron work. Put a stop to the perquisites of the India Office, to family contracts, and to jobbery in a hundred forms, and a large proportion of the stores now imported from England could be manufactured and obtained in India. With the impetus thus given to Indian industries technical education would become one of the requirements of the day, and not merely the idle dream of well-meaning but impractical theorists.

It seems something of pity, says the Times of India, that the beautiful and elaborate Indian screens, which formed so prominent a feature of the Indian and Colonial Exhibition, were not brought back to this country, where they would have been appreciated, and where they could have at all events found a home in the different local museums. In London they were sold off at a terrible sacrifice, the only bidders apparently being the promoters of the forthcoming Glasgow and Manchester Exhibitions. The four screens that formed the Bombay and Baroda Courts were sold for £323. They cost Rs. 16,000. The others were disposed of at the same low prices, and thus a costly and unique collection of the various styles of Indian architecture has been scattered and broken up. We wonder some enterprising American did not purchase the lot. In New York, Boston, and Chicago, Indian wood-carving fetches fabulous prices, and some of the finest carved house-fronts of Ahmedabad are now the property of American citizens.

INDIA.

CALCUTTA, FEB. 27.

Accounts of the Jubilee rejoicings continue to drop in from the remoter districts, and some of them present points of interest. Mr. Ward, Chief Commissioner of Assam, he'd a durbar at Shillong, and delivered a long speech, reviewing the history of the province during the last fifty years. In that time he said its population and settled area had been nearly trebled. The first tea plantation had been started about fifty years ago. There were now 200,000 acres under tea, while the land taken up by planters, although not yet actually planted, amounted to about 400,000 acres. Again, fifty years ago the land revenue of five districts, comprising Assam proper, had been about four and a-half lakhs of rupees; it had grown to twenty-six lakhs. Then the journey from Gowhatty to Debrooghur had occupied a month or six weeks; now it took three days.

The Jubilee was celebrated with due ceremony in Cashmere. A salute of 101 guns was fired at Srinuggur, and food was distributed to the poor. The Maharajah gave a banquet to the European residents, and a dinner to 500 poor persons.

The Nepaulese Government was not behind those of other States in doing honour to the occasion. A grand parade of 11,000 men was held at Khatmandoo, after which the Minister, the Commander-in-Chief, and several high officials attended a durbar at the Residency, when the Resident handed to the Minister a complimentary letter from the Viceroy. In the evening the Residency was illuminated.

On Monday last the new Hooghly railway bridge, which forms a connecting link between the East Indian and East Bengal lines, was formerly opened by the Viceroy, in the presence of the Lieutenant-Governor and a large and distinguished party of visitors, and at Lord Dufferin's suggestion received the name of the "Jubilee Bridge." At the luncheon which followed the Viceroy proposed the health of Sir Bradford Leslie, who, he said, after successive triumphs during a long and arduous career, had now crowned his work by the erection of the Jubilee Bridge, and whom he congratulated on the fact that the completion of the structure had been so happily timed as to coincide with the auspicious epoch then being so triumphantly celebrated. Among the honours which had been accorded by Her Majesty, none, he added, were better merited or better bestowed than that of which Sir B. Leslie had been the recipient. Sir B. Leslie replied briefly, and bore testimony to the valuable assistance given by the resident staff of engineers.

The Public Service Commission has been sitting in Calcutta during the past week, and has examined a number of witnesses, who appear to agree only on one point—namely, that the so-called Statutory Civil Service, as now constituted, is neither popular nor efficient. On almost every other point there were hopeless differences of opinion, at least among the European witnesses. Thus, Mr. Beveridge, additional Judge of the 24-Pergunnahs, would recruit the Civil Service by open competition in India, and thought it inevitable that the European element should be altogether eliminated. He did not think this would endanger the country. Europeans were perhaps superior to Natives, but the latter could administer their own country better. To a question put by a member of the Commission, Mr. Beveridge replied that England should not give up India at once, as anarchy would follow; and to avert this he would keep the British army. Mr. Cotton, Secretary of the Board of Revenue, thought the time had come for re-organising the Civil Service, and admitting Indian gentlemen more largely, but he would appoint them only to the more advanced districts, and leave the others under the present system. The Hon. Mr. Reynolds, member of the Board of Revenue, said that the country was in a state of transition. It was essential to have European civilians in executive charge of districts, but district judgeships should be given to Natives. Mr. Beames, Commissioner of Burdwan, would leave the Civil Service as it was and restrict it to Europeans. He would make ample provision for Natives in other ways. In the course of his long experience he had often found the Natives wanting in pluck, tact, firmness, courage, and devotion. The great masses of the people would infinitely prefer to be governed by Englishmen rather than by Natives.

Sir Alfred Croft, Director of Public Instruction, said that Natives selected for the Civil Service should be sent for some years to England at the public expense. Mr. Charles, District Judge, expressed an opinion that Lord Ripon's orders, excluding Europeans from the uncovenanted Service, were altogether illegal. He quoted figures to show that while the Hindoos were little more than half of the population of Lower Bengal, they had almost an entire monopoly of uncovenanted appointments. Sir W. Petheram, the Chief Justice, would recruit the district Judges from the Bar by competition. The Hon. Mr. Paul, Advocate-General, did not object to the statute creating a native Civil Service, but said that the selection under it, with few exceptions, showed favouritism. Mr. Ameer Ali would make such changes in examination subjects as would give Mahomedans a better chance, and would separate the executive and judicial services.

The Bengalee witnesses expressed themselves generally in favour of raising the limit of the age for admission to examinations for the Civil Service, and of holding the examinations in India, as well as in England. Most of them added that candidates selected in India should be sent to England, to undergo further training.

The Viceroy will leave Calcutta on March 16, and go to Durbunghah, where he is to remain about a week, proceeding then to Delhi, where a sitting of the Legislative Council will be held, for the purpose of passing the Punjab Land Bill. After spending three days at Delhi, the Viceroy will go for a fortnight to Dehra Doon, and will reach Simla about the middle of April.

Sir A. Colvin will remain here until the Budget has been published, about the 23rd of March. As no fresh taxation is to be imposed the Budget will take the form of a Minute in the Government Gazette.

General Roberts left Calcutta on Thursday for Bombay. He will go next to Umballa, and then to Rawul Pindi, Peshawur, Nowshera, Quetta, and Pishin, returning to India by the Hurnai route.

General Torno Shahjeer Jung Bahadur, Commander-in-Chief of Nepal, has gone to Madras, on a pilgrimage to certain shrines of Southern India. He will return to Nepal via Calcutta.

BURMA.

RANGOON, FEB. 27.

Mr. Crosthwaite arrived here to-day, and will assume the Government to-morrow. Sir C. Bernard will leave for Calcutta by the mail of March 4.

Three large and destructive fires have occurred in rapid succession in Rangoon. Considerable alarm prevails, and the town is nightly patrolled by the military police owing to the prevalence of a report that attempts will be made to fire the town by dacoits. There is, however, no evidence that the recent fires were not of accidental origin.

At a public meeting held yesterday in the Rangoon Town-hall resolutions were passed censuring the inefficiency of the police and urging the necessity for reforming the force.

Yesterday a deputy-commissioner and an inspector of police with a body of armed policemen attacked a band of dacoits near Bassein. The inspector and a police havildar were wounded. Three dacoits were killed, and their heads were cut off and carried to Bassein. The practice of decapitating Shan dacoits and carrying their heads about the country is generally condemned, and ought to be forthwith prohibited. Some discontent exists among the Roman Catholic soldiers at Mandalay owing to the fact that the English-speaking Catholic chaplains have been removed and replaced by French priests unable to speak English. The military authorities are not to blame for this change; it is due to a dispute between the Roman Catholic bishops of Madras and Mandalay as to the right to nominate army chaplains.

AFGHANISTAN.

CALCUTTA, FEB. 27.

A Lahore newspaper states that the Afghan Ameer is distributing a pamphlet in which he describes his visit to Rawul Pindi two years ago, and also the movements of Russia on the northern frontier.

It is reported that he continues to prepare for a campaign against the Ghalzais, who seem determined to resist. A fight is said to have taken place near Thull, between the Waziris on the one side, and the Turis and Ghalzais on the other, the dispute being about certain rights of pasturage. There is, however, no authentic news on the subject.

DR. K. P. GUPTA, recommends, in a letter to the Englishman that the Jubilee should be commemorated throughout the mofussil towns of Bengal by the construction of works for improving their water-supply. "The opening of drinking fountains, tanks, and wells of good water," he says, "would be consonant with the religious instincts of their race." In the olden times, rich Hindus and Mahomedans built tanks and dighees (artificial lakes) for the use of the people. With the decline of their ancient faith and zeal the digging of new tanks for consecration has almost ceased, while old tanks are neglected on account of family disputes and the ruin of ancient houses. He suggests:—
1. That where tanks exist, one or more, according to the size and population of a town or village, should be cleaned and set apart for drinking water only; as the Maharanee Raj Rajeswari Jubilee memorial tanks. 2. That wells should be dug where there are no tanks, the number varying with the population of the villages, and protected from contamination by being paved and cemented, and no bathing or washing allowed. The wells to be designated Maharanee R.R. Jubilee wells of drinking water. 3. That drinking fountains and troughs for cattle should be opened in places where the people find it difficult to water their cattle and sheep. 4. On river banks, where the supply of water is abundant and good, bathing-ghats should be built and designated as Jubilee Memorial Ghats.

ANGLO-INDIAN PRESS.

LIFE IN THE NATIVE STATES.

(Bombay Gazette.)

The Bombay Administration Report, though as usual a formidable volume, and not by any means to be included amongst the light literature of the day, does not fall under the condemnation passed by the liveliest yet most serious of philosophers upon books of the "dry-as-dust" species. By a careful avoidance of the statistical tables and the semi-statistical abstracts in which it abounds it is possible to catch in its pages here and there a glimpse of the life and manners of the people over whose interest the Bombay Government watches, and to detect the signs of progress, or otherwise, which the most elaborate tables would only obscure. It is in the chapter which deals with the relations between the Tributary States and the Government of Bombay that these side views are most plentifully presented. If, for instance, we go almost as far north as the limits of the Presidency extend, to distant Khairpur in Sind, we find a State as backward in most respects as any that have political relations with the British Government, yet presenting no small interest to a student of the history of institutions. The Chief, Mir Ali Murad, who was born in Waterloo year, governs the sandy desert of Khairpur in truly patriarchal fashion. He and his sons are the dispensers of the law, and he is the sole Court of Appeal. The administrative connection between the Ameer's family and the State is equally close. The Ameer's sons hold the greater part of the territory in jaghir, and thus the government of the State mainly resolves itself into a careful supervision of a group of jaghirs. Obviously an administration so conducted must be of the loosest, and indeed the report speaks of it as being of a patriarchal character. This is explained in another paragraph, which informs us that each tharadar is independent and does what appears to him best, subject only to the general supervision of the jagirdar in whose jaghir he may be serving. Let not the scientific administration of the Paramount Power mock the humble irregularities of this primitive State. We could show them a more excellent way, but we could never be sure that they would walk in it, or if they did walk that they could walk well. Besides, Khairpur is a cherished survival of the rule of the Ameer of Sind, the independence which the Ameer retains being the reward which Sir Charles Napier confirmed to him for standing out from the Talpur Ameer.

It is not possible to find elsewhere in the Presidency anything so closely approaching the ideal of patriarchal government as this. But wherever we see the feudal system of the East in operation, even in States much larger than that of Khairpur, it tends to an independence of the central authority, which, unless checked by a strong hand, develops into a local autonomy not far short of anarchy. Thus in the State of Idar, where the relations between the Chief and the large landholders under him resemble those of a king in the Middle Ages to his barons, many of the Sirdars exercise independent jurisdiction on their estates, to the great detriment, the report says, of the police administrators of the superior lord. Complications of this kind constitute some of the chief difficulties in the administration of Kathiawar. The minute sub-division of its territory may be inferred from the fact that a province of twenty thousand square miles area, and a population of above two millions and a quarter, is divided amongst nearly two hundred chiefs, each of them with some power of jurisdiction. The writer of the report dwells upon the various and intricate land tenures, the petty jealousies of the different States, the frequent domestic quarrels within the families of the Chiefs, and the wild and reckless character of a large part of the population, as elements which retard the work of reform. "At present," he adds, "the province presents a curious picture. A railway traverses a country infested by outlaws whose existence would be more appropriate to the dark ages, and stories of reckless bloodshed and unpunished crime that would be deemed inordinate in the wilds of Tartary are carefully entered in the latest of printed criminal returns of the nineteenth century." The picture will bear reproducing in the report of the current year, and we fear that there will be no need to tone down its colours. The recent murderous attack upon Mr. Anderson in the neighbourhood of Rajkot would not have been out of place in "the wilds of Tartary." But besides irregularities arising from conflict of jurisdiction and disorders which occur in defiance of all jurisdiction, there are strange episodes in the history of some of the smaller States to which the author of comic opera may some day turn when the humours of European Court life have been exhausted. Look, for instance, at the short paragraph which is devoted to chronicling the history of the State of Pol, in the Mahi Kantha Agency, during the year. Here, again, we must be dealing with a State whose administrative organism cannot be very finely wrought, for we read of it "the Chief of Pol secluded himself in a frontier hill village during the year. Access to this village is most difficult. The State is badly administered." But why should not an Achilles, even though he hail from the Mahi Kantha, abide in his tent? In another of the small States in this Agency there has been a court comedy of a kind not altogether unfamiliar in India. Of Mansa it is reported: "The Chief died during the year. An unsuccessful attempt was made to pass off a spurious child as heir." The report is laconic enough, but to people who know anything about the back stair influences at work in some of the petty Native States, it tells an interesting tale.

Dacoity, as we have seen, fills an only too prominent part in the history of many of the States. When we read that nearly half the police force of a first class State like Cambay were stationed during part of the year on the Eastern frontier to prevent the entry of the Kathiawar outlaw, Mowar Sadhwani, we get some idea of the burden that people of this class impose, not only upon the States upon whose territory they commit depredations, but upon those who have not yet made their acquaintance. Justice was vindicated in the capture of this supremely troublesome marauder during the year; but the institution in which he was so conspicuous still flourishes in Kathiawar and other territories. Ninety-nine dacoities in Kathiawar is an abundant record for the year. In these affrays property worth a lakh and a quarter was destroyed or stolen, nineteen persons were killed, eighteen were carried off as hostages, and ninety-three wounded. And although more than seven hundred people are reported to have been concerned in these outrages, only forty-seven were captured and convicted. There must be either much sympathy with crime, or much fear to inform against criminals for such a state of things to be possible. Where the Bhils are, we look for outrage as very nearly a matter of course. In the Mahi Kantha States they distinguished themselves in the year under report by crimes one of which, as described in the report, has a decidedly dramatic appearance. A dacoity takes place, and four men of the Idar police go to a Bhil village to make arrests in connection with it. The police are asked to rest in the village. This they do, until their rest is interrupted by the appearance of a crowd of Bhils from that and the neighbouring villages, who massacre them. The end of the story is, not that a dozen Bhils are hanged for murder, but that the village is deserted by its inhabitants, who fly across the border into Rajputana, and the scene of the crime becomes a waste place. "By this," too, as the story goes, "you may know the Bhil." Yet something must be done for him. There are other uses to put a man to than to hang him, say the opponents of capital punishment, and as he does his best to prevent us hanging him, we may in return do our best to prevent him from being in need of hanging. The Agent for Bhils is working well in this direction, and the Bhil Corps is not without its uses as a tamer and educator of the hitherto untamable. We can wish well, too, to the Bhagat who has invented a brand-new religion for the benefit of the Bhil, and who was visited by the Mahi Kantha Political Agent during the year. We must think none the worse of him because he professes to have a divine mission, and perhaps his endeavours to encourage habits of cleanliness amongst a people sadly negligent of the gospel of soap and water are as good a warrant for the claim as any other that he could put forth. A saint who undertakes to conduct two schools for Bhil boys, and who preaches a morality in which, as a leading feature, abstinence from crimes of violence, from abduction of married women, theft, and intemperance is insisted on, is a saint of the highest respectability, who ought to be sought out for Jubilee honours.

THE PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION.

(Times of India.)

Our readers must be almost as pleased as ourselves to find that we have at last got rid of that terrible incubus, the Public Service Commission's report. Everyone, big or little, and whether he had anything to say or not, seemed to speak at the same inordinate length. It is almost impossible to deal fairly with evidence of such a bulky nature, and only by close and fatiguing study can any sort of analysis be obtained. We are, however, at last able to gauge public opinion pretty accurately on some of the more important points. The Statutory Civil Service has been universally condemned both by Europeans and Natives. The proposal to hold simultaneous examinations for the Civil Service in England and in India has been emphatically negatived by the English and Mahomedan witnesses and by all except the extreme representatives of the party that style themselves "Young India." It was generally agreed by all the English witnesses that, as Mr. Justice West put it, "a British Government of India, the effective application of English ideas and principles, implies that the heads of the chief departments of Government shall be either English born or educated from childhood in England. This is especially true of the general administration. For the same reason there must in every great department be English enough to keep it well under view from the British standpoint to bring English ideas to bear on it, and to keep up an intelligent and sympathetic relation between it and the other great departments moved and controlled by the same central group of principles. . . . For such men we can look only to a Covenanted Service composed of Englishmen by birth or at least by education." On the other hand, the hardship inflicted on the Native candidates by the reduction of the limit of age was, for the first time, openly and fully acknowledged even by the extreme representatives of English feeling. Here Mr. Justice Bayley's evidence is particularly valuable. "Natives of India," he says, "labour under great disadvantage from the age being so low as nineteen. I wrote strongly against such limit several years ago when consulted by the Government of India." And his words are echoed by almost every witness of standing. It was also very generally felt that if the test is equal Persian and Sanskrit should receive the same marks as Latin and Greek. The European witnesses pretty generally agreed that Natives, except in certain exceptional positions, should not receive the same salaries as Englishmen. Here we again quote that impartial witness, Mr. Justice West:—"A Native doing the work of a Covenanted officer is really overpaid if he receives half the usual salary. An Englishman would be overpaid at half the same salary were he working in his own country." Thus six important points seem to be already settled. This could have been accomplished much more easily if half-a-dozen questions had been asked instead of 184.

So far as we can venture to foretell the result of the Commission's labours, their recommendations will suggest the advisability of returning to the old system; that is, the limit of age will be twenty-three years as before, and Persian and Sanskrit will recover their old position in the examination. With this, from what we gather, the more moderate Natives will be quite content, and after this very general expression of public opinion, we do not see how less can be granted. Before leaving this part of the subject there is one point in which most of the Native witnesses require to be put right. They really seemed to believe that the limit of age had been reduced from twenty-three years to nineteen in order to shut out Native competition. This is an error pure and simple. There was no need of any safeguard against a sudden inroad of Natives. Under the old regulations, as under the new, the rate of Native admissions has been much the same, averaging scarcely more than one successful candidate every two years. The change was effected in the honest endeavour to get lads to compete direct from the public schools instead of through the professional "crammers," and then, having "caught them young," to give them afterwards the advantage of a university career. From an English standpoint it has been tolerably successful. From an Indian standpoint its operations now seem to have been harsh, but this has been entirely accidental. But over and above the increase in the limit of age and the restoration of Sanskrit and Persian to their old position some of the best men of the Indian extreme party, such, for instance, as Mr. Pherozeshaw M. Mehta, still insist that the examinations should be held simultaneously in India and England. But their arguments were admirably answered by Mr. Lee-Warner. He gives four especial reasons: "(1). My arguments point to a limitation of the Indian element in the Covenanted Civil Service as the condition on which we can alone exclude the English element from the superior public service of India. (2). I am familiar with Indian examinations, having examined for the Bombay and the Calcutta University examinations, and I am confident that we have not the power to maintain in India the standard of oral examination applied at home. (3). I regard the danger of acquiring knowledge of the papers and of cribbing in the Indian examination as a very appreciable danger. (4). A competitive examination is supposed to embody the attractive theory of la carrière ouverte aux talents, but in England competition is only a part of the whole educational scheme. That scheme involves a great expense for education, and that expense secures a limited competition from the ranks of persons of means. This class of society in England represents a high standard of social and moral fitness. We know what is meant by the word a 'gentleman.' In India the State gives an almost gratuitous education to the poor." In England no boy has a chance of success whose parents have not been able for some years to spend a hundred or a hundred and fifty pounds per annum on his education. This is a class test. In India the chief burden of education is borne by the State. Mr. Lee-Warner's arguments have given rise to much heated controversy. But it has, we think, been established in the first place that the boys who attend the local high schools are not of the same class as the boys who go to our public schools at home; and, in the second, that the educational organisation in India is not so perfect as it is in England. No young man of twenty-three who had been educated in this country would stand a fair chance among University men of his own age at home. The simultaneous examinations would be a failure from the first, and there is, then, no need to try a mortifying experiment.

Incidentally, Sir Charles Sargent, Chief Justice of Bombay, raised a side issue which has attracted more attention than anything else. He said that if Government desired the Natives to have a larger share in the administration of the country, that could best be done by admitting them to the judicial branch of the service. In this Presidency, he proceeded, all the "subordinate judgeships are held by Natives of this country, and his lordship thought persons of special merit might be promoted from their ranks to the post of District Judge. It was scarcely to be expected that young civilians who came out here and joined the judicial branch could know better than subordinate judges who had spent their lives in the service. His lordship was understood to say that he thought the administration of justice suffered from appeals being sent to young civilian judges, whose knowledge was by no means superior to that of subordinate judges." He was, as far as we understand him, prepared to give over the whole of the civil administration to the subordinate judges, and he thought that in matters of fact subordinate judges are more frequently right than civilian judges. He spoke from an intellectual, not a moral, point of view, and only in reference to the civil side. "I suppose," he added, "that an European makes a better criminal judge than a Native, at least from an European point of view, though, perhaps, it may not always be regarded so from a Native point of view." The Chief Justice's evidence has been received with triumphant satisfaction by the Native Press, and has not been particularly palatable to the judicial members of the Civil Service. When Mr. Justice West was examined later on he explained that he was desirous of removing a false impression that seemed to prevail as to what the Chief Justice said. He was prepared to accept the subordinate judges as men eminently qualified for their offices, and if it were absolutely necessary to reduce the Covenanted Civil Service they formed a fund from which the Government might readily draw. But if any inference could be drawn from the Chief Justice's opinion that "the covenanted officers filling the post of district judges were found to be comparatively inefficient, much less if it were supposed that they were less qualified than the subordinate judges, that was an opinion in which he could not concur, nor did he think that it was the opinion of the most intelligent of the subordinate judges themselves. It was generally known that he had watched by the cradle of the existing Subordinate Judicial Service in this Presidency, and he should be very sorry to find it disparaged in its maturity." When two such high authorities differ—and they seem to differ fundamentally—we can scarcely presume to offer an opinion until a large mass of other expert evidence has accumulated.

TECHNICAL EDUCATION IN INDIA.—I.

(Statesman.)

A great many persons, we believe, would be glad to know what "technical education" really means, and we confess ourselves to be of the number. We made some remarks upon this subject a month or two ago, that elicited strong approval in the North-West Provinces, while the Christian College Magazine at Madras reproduced them, with the remark that the Government of that presidency was attempting to learn "through Mr. Havell's inquiries, and by other means," exactly what we asked for therein. We know what technical education means in America, but are not so sure of the meaning attached to the words by the committee of the projected Imperial Institute at home, and are still more in doubt of their meaning in India. In America the meaning of the words is manual training in the common industries of the carpenter, turner, blacksmith, plasterer, &c. In Mr. Ham's book (Blackie and Son) technical education, as practised at the Chicago Manual Training School, simply means teaching boys how to use mechanical tools, the teaching being based upon the belief, in Mr. Ham's words, that "It is possible and practicable to let every child of fair capacity start in life from his school a skilled worker with the principal tools of all the mechanical employments, an athlete with the maximum of health possible to him, and thoroughly at home in science and literature." The Athenæum notices the Utopian character of these views, in so far as England is concerned, whatever may be the case at Chicago. "Considering the constitution of 'every child,' at any rate on this side of the Atlantic," says that journal, "we may dismiss the possibility which is here brought before us, for we are certainly not within measurable distance of its realisation. The Chicago school is a most admirable and useful foundation, containing well-appointed laboratories for carpenter's work, wood-turning, founding, forging, and the like, and in each of these, some two dozen bright, healthy lads are working hard under skilled instructors. Whether or not they are 'destined to lift the veil from the face of Nature,' as Mr. Ham expects, we are not inclined confidently to affirm; but there can be no doubt whatever that many, if not all of them, will become clever handicraftsmen, perhaps shrewd manufacturers, and certainly formidable competitors with European workmen."

Now, what we want to know is—whether this is what is meant by the cry for "technical education" in this country. Are we going to open schools of this Chicago order in India? And is it a demand for training schools of this kind that is being echoed on all hands? We doubt it, for what possible connection can there be between schools of this order and our Universities, or even the schools of art which are constantly named in association with the cry. Mr. Ham is almost hysterical in the rapture with which he describes the Chicago institute. "This," he exclaims, "is the school that Locke dreamed of, that Bacon wished for, that Rousseau described, and that Comenius, Pestalozzi, and Froebel struggled in vain to establish. . . . For if it be, as I claim, the true school it is destined to lift the veil from the face of Nature, to reveal her most precious secrets, and to divert to man's use all her treasures. Yes; it is to other schools what the diamond is to other precious stones—the last analysis of educational thought."

Is there not a tendency in India to this extravagance? At all events, we should be glad to be relieved of the uncertainty we are in as to what the advocates of technical education in India do really mean. The Evening Standard says it is "mischievous jargon," in which we are indulging on the subject, and irreverently applies the phrase to Lord Dufferin's comments at Madras upon Sir Grant Duff's utterances thereon. Before we go any further, would it not be as well to define our terms, and try to get a clear conception of the precise thing we propose to do? There is a good deal of confusion, we suspect, in the public mind in the use of the term "art" in this association. The purpose and pursuits of the various local "schools of art," as they are called, in Calcutta, Bombay, Lahore, and elsewhere, are mixed up in the public mind with the industrial or mechanical work of what are the mere artisan classes. The Hindoo Patriot, in a late issue, quoted some incisive remarks of the Standard upon this movement in India, which may assist our readers to define more clearly what the special object of the movement is. "What," asks the Standard, "is this parade of a 'strong conviction of the importance of spreading art education among the people of India.' When this sort of thing is addressed to English children, or English adults, it does no harm, and may possibly do good. As our system goes, men in authority must say something upon any matter that turns up, whether they know anything or not. But to tell the people of India, in an age when we have just reached such an elementary acquaintance with art, as to recognise them as our masters, that they should go to school again, is a most disastrous utterance. For they will neither laugh nor rage, but simply will take the advice of the Sircar—such as hear of it—and lay down rules for the artisan. What is the purpose of our own 'art education,' for those who understand its meaning? To raise our dull and tasteless practice to the level, if it may be, which India attained centuries ago; to effect, by rule and dogma, those results which instinct taught her children to seek, and the patient skill to achieve. 'The Indian workmen,' writes our highest authority, 'from the humblest potter to the most cunning embroiderer in blue and purple and scarlet, is not the less a true artist. Dr. Birdwood might have gone very much further. These are the people whom we are to teach! Under the enlightened influence of the Maharaja of Oshmere, we have already trained a portion of them indeed; and the exquisite arts of that province, as the same gentleman declares, have been 'ruined by the improvement.'"

We brought this extract privately to the notice of an old civilian, who is perhaps the highest authority upon the subject at this moment in India, and he tells us that he is obliged to agree in substance with the views expressed therein, although the language is a little too impassioned. In India, as in all other countries, the higher classes think far more of fashion than of art. But our Native artisans themselves have inherited correct ideas, and if left to themselves, would be only too glad to put them in practice. We believe with Mr. Growse, that if the Government were boldly to abolish the department of Public Works, so far as district work is concerned, and allow the local Boards and Municipalities, to employ their indigenous guilds of artisans upon local works, all art industries would rapidly develop of themselves in India, and there would be no occasion for any outlay on schools. At all events, let us have an expression of more definite views on a subject that every one seems to think it necessary to talk about, but upon which no definite ideas seem to be entertained anywhere.

THE INDIAN POST OFFICE.

(Pioneer.)

The Annual Report on the operations of the Indian Post Office for 1885-86 shows satisfactory work and steady progress. The number of articles conveyed through the post during the year was 239 millions, or 22 millions more than during the previous year. The largest share of this increase has been in post-cards, which went up 20.85 per cent., and in newspapers, which increased by 16.19 per cent. Although the number of parcels shows an increase of over 10 per cent., still there has been a falling-off of nearly a lakh of rupees in the revenue derived from the parcel service. This is attributed to the successful competition of the Railway Companies, who have drawn away the bulk of the traffic in heavy parcels, and have left the Post Office only the lighter parcels which, realising small postage and requiring the same amount of work as heavy parcels, are anything but remunerative. The value-payable system continues as popular as ever, upwards of 436,000 articles of the declared value of Rs. 45,32,803 having been sent through the post. The home of the value-payable system seems to be amongst the tradesmen of Calcutta, by whom nearly half the total number of articles were posted, and for whom 21½ lakhs of rupees were collected by the Post Office during the year. The introduction of value-payable unregistered book-packets, by which books and pamphlets may be sent value-payable without the expense of registration and without compulsory prepayment, has been successful in the extreme. More than 50,000 such packets were despatched during the first six months after the introduction of the scheme, and there is every promise of this branch of work developing considerably in the future.

The insurance system shows a large falling off and a loss of income of nearly Rs. 24,000 during the year. This is attributed to the withdrawal of the privilege of insuring articles exchanged between India and the Persian Gulf and Turkish Arabia—places between which immense quantities of specie, bullion, and valuables, principally pearls, have hitherto been transmitted by post. The money-order business, on the other hand, continues to make gigantic strides. During the year more than four million inland money-orders were issued for over 938 lakhs of rupees, and the Department realised more than 11½ lakhs as commission. These figures are highly satisfactory. The average value of each order was Rs. 22-8-7, and it is shown that this average value has diminished year by year, proving that the money-order business is supported chiefly by the poorer classes of the population, and does not therefore encroach upon the legitimate province of banks and private remitting agencies. Indeed, more than half the orders issued were for sums of Rs. 10 and under, and less than 20 per cent. were for sums above Rs. 25. Ninety per cent of the remitters were Native. However satisfactory the consciousness may be of thus doing good work for the poorer classes, the postal authorities would doubtless be far more gratified to see an increase in the money orders of larger values. The same amount of work exactly is imposed upon the department over a remittance of Rs. 5 as over Rs. 150, while the remuneration gained in the way of commission is in the latter case twelve times as much as in the former, and less trouble is entailed by the payment of large orders, which are payable at big towns, than in the case of small orders payable at villages whither cash has to be conveyed over long distances. Thus, from the departmental point of view, it ought to be highly desirable to secure such custom as would raise the average value of orders remitted through the Post Office. The system of paying money orders by postmen at the payees' addresses has proved thoroughly successful; and the honesty of the postmen has creditably stood the test of the temptations offered by the new system. The transactions in telegraphic money-orders also show an increase, 12,490 such orders for over 8½ lakhs having been issued during the year. The system of paying land revenue by means of money orders has made good progress, and is being widely developed all over the North-Western Provinces. It is proposed to extend it to Bengal.

The Post Office Savings' Bank work shows a very large increase due chiefly to the closing of District Savings' Banks, and the transfer of accounts therefrom to the Post Office. At the close of the year there were 155,000 depositors, with a balance deposited of 225½ lakhs, as compared with 122,599 depositors and a balance of 134½ lakhs at the close of the previous year. This branch of Post Office work is recognised by the Government as "a service of expenditure only," so far as the Department is concerned; and it can be readily understood that no small expenditure is entailed in the keeping up of 155,000 banking accounts. Mr. Hogg makes a rough calculation of the revenue, which ought to be credited to the Post Office on account of this branch of work, by estimating the amount which Government would have paid to Presidency Banks for similar work. These Banks receive a commission of 3 per cent. per annum on the annual balance deposited, besides a charge of eight annas on each active account; working on these rates, the Post Office revenue from its Savings' Bank work would be Rs. 1,11,706. Of course the Presidency Banks being able to invest the amounts of Savings' Bank deposits to the best advantage, may realise a surplus after paying the interest due to depositors. The system is quite analogous to that adopted in England, which might well be followed by the Indian Post Office. The British Postal Savings Bank invests the sums deposited with it in Government scrip, and the amount realised therefrom in interest is, after deducting the interest payable to depositors and the cost of working establishment, shown as the Post Office revenue from Savings Bank work. Some arrangement such as this would reduce the dead charge that is now imposed upon the Indian Post Office by the performance of this work.

The financial position of the Department shows an improvement on the previous year. The Post Office never has been a self-supporting department, but the deficit during the year under review is Rs. 15,14,978, as compared with Rs. 18,56,502. Economy has been gained to a large extent by the system followed lately, of introducing village post offices and employing extra departmental agencies, such as village schoolmasters, local traders, &c., to carry on Post Office work at unimportant places. It is estimated, too, that under the new contract with the P. and O. Company, to come into force on the 1st February, 1888, there will be a saving of £19,000 a-year to the Indian Post Office on its share towards the mail steamer subsidy.

Reviewing the Report generally, there is every reason to be satisfied with the progress made. The Indian Post Office has always served the public well; and, considering the vast area over which its operations extend, the physical difficulties to be encountered, and the exceedingly low pay received by nine-tenths of its staff, the administration has every claim to be congratulated. The thanks of the Government are given to Messrs. Hogg, James and Fanshawe for their successful administration of the Department. Acknowledgment is also made of the services of the late Mr. E. R. Douglas, C.I.E., of Mr. Kisch, Postmaster-General, Bengal, and Pundit Salig Ram, of the N.W. Provinces, for the working of the land-revenue money order system, and of Messrs. F. B. O'Shea and Dorabjee Muncherjee La caca for the management of the Indian Field Post Office sent to Suakin. If the acknowledgments of the public also could be formally expressed, they would be tendered probably to the head of the office and to the headquarters establishment for the ability and activity which keep this important Department, in whose efficiency every man has a personal interest, so well abreast of the progress of the times.

MAHOMEDAN ACCEPTANCE OF BRITISH RULE IN INDIA.

(Madras Mail.)

The Mahomedans in India have at times been blamed for their reluctance to cast down the ancient boundary marks, and for their preference for the ways of their victorious forefathers. Are they not rather to be commended for a loyalty and patriotism that induce them to shrink from aggravating the anxieties and burdens of their rulers, particularly at the moment when the Government is rousing itself to strenuous exertions to reduce expenditure and taxation, and to admit the Natives to a larger share in the administration of their own affairs? A great deal of nonsense has been written and said about Mussulman disaffection to British rule, and during the existence of the dynastic fiction at Delhi, such prejudices may not have been altogether unfounded in Upper, and perhaps in Central India. Since the complete downfall of the Meghal family—so long foolishly invested with the outward insignia of power and majesty—the Mahomedans have reverently bowed to the will of Allah and have accepted the new order of things in touching resignation. Happily for the Government they have not deemed it wise or necessary to break altogether with their glorious past. They disdain to cast away as false the pearls of Arabic and Persian literature. They refuse to give up their belief in Allah, or in the teachings of the Koran. They have no wish to become Revolutionists, Socialists, or Communists. They are born soldiers and administrators, and are willing and ready to render faithful and loving service to the State, without pretending to be enraptured by Burke's eloquence, or enlightened by the scepticism of a Gibbon or the vainglorious cynicism of a Voltaire. It is true that Mahomedan students in schools and colleges are not as numerous as Hindoos in proportion to their census positions. It is equally true that they do not carry off their arithmetical share of distinctions. But it is still more true that education does not deprive them of self-respect, or cause them to be disaffected to the Government that has placed within their reach the means of enlarging their stores of knowledge, and of strengthening and expanding their intellectual faculties. Their manliness also commands respect. They are not usually great talkers, but there is a pervading sense of personal responsibility about them that is of far more value than speech from the mouth outwards. They are essentially religious. The progress of civilisation, and the developments of science have in no way warped their belief in the faith of their forefathers. They "fear God"—they have it in them to "honour the King." Hence it is the experience of those European employers of labour in this country who are considerate in their dealings, that as a general rule Mahomedans are loyal and trustworthy. Not the least of the difficulties that will beset the Public Service Commission when it draws up its report will be that connected with the devising of means for enlisting more largely than hitherto in the service of the State worthy representatives of the fifty-two millions of Mahomedans in this country. Divide et impera is a maxim that should never be forgotten by the Government of the vast congeries of peoples that is called India.

THE HOME CHARGES.

(Statesman.)

The Liberal attributes the growing impoverishment of the cultivator, as many others do, to the immense annual remittance which India has to make to England to meet her annually recurring liability to the mother-country. Our contemporary says:—

"The central evil lies in the fact, that of the £70,000,000 raised annually in India, about half the amount is spent in England. Although proofs are not wanting that Natives are fast becoming fit to take a larger share in the administration of the country, thousands of offices are shut against them, and English youths are brought in large numbers to fill all the important appointments under the Government. That the remittances we are required to make to England, in addition to the Indian tribute, for these foreign employes amount to a fearful sum, is not known to every one."

The Liberal is so fair and honest a critic that we are sure it will wish to be set right on any question of fact. It is not correct then to say that about one-half of the public revenues of India are spent in England. We know now, approximately, that the real amount is about 20 crores of rupees, or say £15,000,000 sterling. The drain from India, however, is not nearly so large as this. As we have frequently pointed out, five or six millions of this amount are really drawn from China, and do not touch the Indian taxpayer. We have at times strongly advised the Government to remodel the accounts, and to strike the revenue derived from opium out of the Indian balance-sheet altogether. It ought not to be there, if for no other reason than the fact that we are constantly obliged to correct, as we are now doing, the false impression which the balance-sheet, as now made out, must convey to every un instructed mind. The real amount of the revenues of India that goes to England is nine or ten millions sterling a year, reckoning the duty paid by China on Indian opium at five to six millions a year. It has further to be remembered that about one-half of the amount thus annually drained from India represents simply the interest upon the money we owe the English capitalist for the construction of our railways. That money we, at all events most of us, are disposed to believe was very wisely borrowed for the purpose. What would India be to-day if there were no railways in the country? and there can be no grievance in our having to pay annual interest upon the money we have thus borrowed for our railway lines. Striking, then, these two items out of the home charges, as we must, there remains the remittance of four or five millions sterling a year for what is not improperly called "tribute." We were the first of all our Indian publicists who called attention to this "tribute" and its economic effect upon the country. About seven crores of rupees a year go to England to defray the home charges properly so-called, and a very large part of that amount we have ever held to be an unjust and dishonourable exaction. Our own eyes were first opened to the fact by the late Sir George Wingate. When we first began to call attention thereto nearly thirty years ago we were asked on all hands what we meant by the home charges, and it was some years before the popular mind of the country came to understand what the term really meant. Our old friend, Dadabhai Nowrojee, was one of the first who took hold of the subject in earnest. The late Lord Sandhurst (at that time Sir William Mansfield) was another, but it was five or six years, at least, before the Indian public and our Indian publicists began to really understand the matter.

Now, for a good many years, we ourselves were under the belief that it was the annual exaction of this drain from India's industry that was impoverishing the agricultural masses of the country, but we have come to see more clearly, year after year since, that the cause is altogether inadequate to the effect. Impoverishing as such a demand is it is not sufficient, we have long felt, to account for the abject condition of the peasantry in so many parts of India. It would be therefore dishonest on our own part were we to say, as we used to say, and as the Liberal now says, that these Home charges are the cause of the national poverty. We have long been convinced that we said so ourselves in error, and that the true causes of the general poverty of the peasantry must be sought for elsewhere. We gravitate more and more steadily every year to the belief that it arises from two causes, and it is of the last importance to the people that we should know whether our conclusions are correct or illusory. We shall not enter upon their consideration here, but we would very earnestly bespeak the attention of the Liberal, and of the whole body of our contemporaries, to what we have said above as preliminary to an exposition of what we believe the causes really are. Of course, the Home charges will pro tanto impoverish the country, but their amount is altogether insufficient to account for the present state of the people, and it is with the real causes of their poverty we are concerned so deeply.

SOME matters of interest may well be made public regarding the Calcutta High Court and its work. Mr. Justice Norris, who obtained one year's furlough without pay, will return towards the end of next month, having obtained permission to cancel his leave. Mr. Justice Cunningham's furlough has been gazetted, while Mr. Justice Pigot has been granted an extension of leave which will carry him on until the Vacation. The present actual strength of the High Court is now lower than it has ever been; there are only four Benches on the Appellate side and two Judges employed exclusively on the Original side; and although there are three Judges absent (including Mr. Justice Mitter on the Public Service Commission), it is not in contemplation to add to the Court in the matter either of permanent or officiating appointments. The Secretary of State has refused to fill the vacancies caused by the retirements of Justices McDonnell and Field; and the present Chief Justice objects very strongly to temporary or acting appointments. Mr. Justice Mitter will return to duty presumably at the end of March, and as this will make the actual working number of Judges eleven, it is not impossible that in order to bring up the Appellate work, which is falling somewhat into arrear in second appeals, one Judge will be withdrawn from the Original side so as to make five Appellate Benches of the usual strength. The only vacancies likely to occur after Mr. Justice Cunningham leaves will happen towards the beginning of the rains, when, as usual, some of the Judges may take privilege leave in addition to the Vacation, the duration of which, by the way, or indeed its exact incidence, has not yet been considered by the Court, though from the dates fixed for the August Sessions it is supposed that it will be earlier than usual.

THE NATIONAL REVIEW.*

The split which Lord Randolph Churchill attempted, with indifferent success, to make in the Tory party, by resigning, on a question, on which he could hope for popular support, naturally occupies attention in the present number of the "National": the Ex-Chancellor of the Exchequer being placed in the pillory by Mr. Baumann, while the missiles aimed at him are—tant soit peu—warded off by Mr. Beckett. We are constrained to say that the attack overweighs the defence. Lord Randolph resigned, according to his own statement, on the question of economy in Military—in which we take leave to include Naval—expenditure. And his apologist maintains that, on this point, he has always been consistent. Consistent to what? His utterances are, that he would not object to expenditure in order "to create an overwhelming navy, adequate to the defence of our coasts, colonies, and commerce" (p. 19). Then, surely, it was his duty to co-operate with his colleagues in securing this essential object; in the attainment of which we regard, as we need scarcely say, as indispensable to the very existence, not only of the Empire, but even of the mother country. But, continues Lord Randolph, we have not got this perfect protection. We are assured that "our navy is impotent against" the most likely coalitions, such as France and Russia. Surely a statesman's conclusion—what would have been Pitt's—would be "make it, not impotent, but potent." What is Lord Randolph's? As we are imperfectly protected, we can be equally so at less cost (p. 19). (Why not push the argument further, and be unprotected at no cost at all?) But this is the ground on which a Statesman, professing Toryism—though, like his "dearest foe," pandering to a venal mob in order to earn a cheap popularity—thinks himself justified in doing his best to break up the only Government which, in the face of an impending tempest, domestic and foreign, is trusted throughout Europe, to steer the barque of English prosperity safe into port. Surely Lord Randolph can see that our expenditure, however heavy, is but an insurance; that, if we protect nothing, there will soon be nothing left to protect? First make your fortress impregnable, you will have time enough, while the enemy are contemplating abortive assaults, to consider, whether you cannot dispense with a gun, or a sentinel, here and there.

The Church question, i.e., Disestablishment, in Scotland is the subject of an interesting Paper, the chief fault of which is, that it presupposes too much knowledge on the part of the readers. Few Southrons can follow with patience (not to say with attention) the numberless party watchwords which are to them as unmeaning and as incomprehensible as such terms as "know-nothing" on the other side of the Atlantic. That the would-be Liberationists were, after the promise of their support had been secured, thrown over (p. 51) (as every sect and party who has trusted him has been) by the Director of Hawarden, everyone knows; "dear old Scotland" has, too late, learnt quid valeat Cleon.

Londoners, whom the incidence of the Coal and Wine duties touches, will be glad to read an article on this matter by Mr. R. G. Welsch. We throw aside, as applicable to all trifling reductions of imposts, the argument, that the abolition of the duty might not reach the small consumer. The real argument, if any there be, for the retention of these duties, is, that they would be honestly devoted to public improvements. And it can hardly be denied that the onus probandi in this matter rests with the Corporation of London and with the Metropolitan Board, the recipients of the proceeds of the duties in question, neither of whom is usually considered quite immaculate in the expenditure of sums entrusted to them.

The burning question of Ireland is the subject of an article by Lord Courtown, which is valuable as indicating the circumstances which, at one time accentuating race antagonism in Ireland, have now added a war of religion to a war of races. The analysis (pp. 89-90) of the number of names of Teutonic, as compared with those of Celtic, voters, in Wexford (a county which is stated to offer especial facilities for the comparison) may be taken, apart from the interest attaching to it in other respects, as a fair specimen of the distribution of the Celtic and Teutonic races; out of 19,348 voters, we read that "9,681 bore Teutonic, and 9,667 Celtic, names."

"A Woman" writes very strongly regarding the effects of Civilisation on Women. Premising—probably on the principle that God made the country, and man made the town—that (p. 31) "the ideal existence of a wife and mother is an agricultural one," the writer tells us—ex uno disce omnes—that "the progress of civilisation in the last seventy years has been disastrous to the female sex." She insists—and most justly—on the fact, that certain pursuits, appropriated by men, are more especially adapted to the female; and it seems to us that her enumeration of these wrongly excludes almost as many as it wrongly includes. She is especially hard on male-midwives, and her language as regards poor Princess Charlotte of Wales ("one of the first to employ a male-midwife—she died—possibly in consequence”) deserves the severest animadversion. The Princess's medical man forgot, as is well known, Napoleon's counsel to Marie Louise's accoucheur, “think that you are attending on some poor thing (une fille) of the Faubourg St. Antoine,” and lost his head, as in a critical case, any diplômés might do. Has the “Woman” ever read, in the excellent Indian Magazine, or in the reports of Lady Dufferin's Fund, how many of her darker sisters annually fall victims to the ignorance of “female” midwives?

“That a great power, like British India, should have consented to sit, for so many years, under the sentence of exclusion” from commercial intercourse with Tibet, is undoubtedly one of those things which no fellow can understand; nor can it be doubted that, with cautious and conciliatory diplomacy at Peking, the abolition of the “sentence of exclusion” would long since have been procured. But a nation which flings an insult at the face of the Chinese Emperor by leaving itself practically unrepresented at Peking for nearly two years, can hardly be said to occupy a favourable position for asking what ought to be a great favour. Mr. Gundry's article on this very important subject will attract the attention of every Anglo-Indian reader.

A more languid interest attaches to the question, What were the relations of Plato's philosophy to the most ancient oriental form of what now, under the apostleship of Madame Blavatsky and Mr. Sinnett, goes by the name of Theosophy? On this somewhat recondite subject Miss Zimmern contributes an article which few ladies could have written.

We ought not to omit mentioning Mr. N. L. Cohen's valuable paper on “Free Registries, and the Marketing of Labour,” as containing many valuable suggestions.

GROWTH OF FREEDOM IN THE BALKAN PENINSULA AND THE BULGARIAN STRUGGLE FOR INDEPENDENCE.*

A perusal of these valuable and interesting volumes will assuredly not tend to remove the veil of intricacy which drapes the Eastern question. The skein of diverse nationalities, diverse interests, diverse aspirations, seems entangled beyond all power of unravelling. The atmosphere is charged with conflicting sympathies and opponent confidencies; 'tis in very truth and deed political chaos. Take, for instance, nationalities. First there are the people of Montenegro—brave mountaineers, men to whom war is the very breath of their nostrils—a race upon whose soil the conqueror's foot has never trod, a people so honest that the traveller may journey unmolested from end to end of the land, while thievery is an unknown vice; and yet, withal, these high-minded martial sons of Mars when removed from the hills which shelter them, and the mountains which give them birth, become so degraded, so dead to all the better feelings of the human breast, that they rapidly degenerate into mere “Bashi-Bazouks,” and place the assassin's dagger at the disposal of the highest bidder.

Then there are Bosnia and Herzegovina, the most unsafe countries imaginable wherein a traveller can risk life and limb; lands seething with discontent, and only waiting a favourable and fitting opportunity to reopen the question of their independence—a question fraught with danger to the peace of Europe.

North-East of this region there is Serbia, a huge inland nation pinning for the acquisition of a seaboard to enable it to export the large surplus stock of cereals which a rich soil produces in abundant plenty—a nation whose independence is written in characters of blood, whose dust is rendered sacred with the bones of her sons fallen in the defence of the land which nurtured them—a brave, spirited, honest, and industrious people.

Bulgaria next demands a more than passing glance, for has it not produced one of the most remarkable men of modern times in the person of Prince Alexander of Battenberg—a name familiar in connection with the recent events which have profoundly astounded and shocked the sensibilities of Europe—a warrior, a statesman, and, far above all these, a patriot!

Lastly, there is the “extinct volcano,” Greece—with its splendid memories, its history, its failings, its vices—peopled by an unstable, intriguing, arrogant race, versed in the arts of crookedness and deceit, and yet possessing aspirations worthy of the classic days when her armies ruled the world, her fleets swept the seas, and her language and literature gave polish and culture to the barbarians of Europe.

What a strange medley of peoples and races! Scarcely less varied is the political picture which the Eastern Question presents to view. There is Austria, as eager to press down upon Salonika as Russia is ready to pounce upon Constantinople. Each of these Powers, jealous of the other, seeks at every turn to counteract the influence of its neighbour and foil its efforts. There are plots, counterplots, conspiracies, intrigues, assassinations, murders, depositions, and the like—a very kaleidoscope of horrors and mysteries. Then there are the interests of Germany, of England, of France, which conflict at every turn, which bewilder, which confuse. Add to this “hotchpot” the natural instincts of the diverse races to which allusion has been made, and what a “bubble, bubble, toil and trouble!” is displayed! In the midst of this ocean of unrest one thing, and one alone, seems settled, conclusive and indisputable; it is the title of Russia as the most unscrupulous, designing, unprincipled power which has ever disgraced the annals of the world. There is no villainy too low, no guile too revolting, no underhand plot too mean, for the agents of “Holy Russia.” Major Von Huhn, a German with Russian instincts; Mr. Minchin, an Englishman, with all the love of straightforwardness and truth inherent to his race, both proclaim the same story of disgusting chicanery and sickening deception.

As regards the two works they may fitly be read as the complement the one of the other; they are both interesting, both contain valuable information, and both throw a flood of light upon the vexed “Eastern Question.”

THE FIRST EMPRESS OF THE EAST.*

Mr. Cameron Macdowall's “First Empress of the East” is the celebrated Zenobia of Palmyra, whose right of priority many will be inclined to dispute. Certain, however, it is that she ruled her husband, Odenathus (who is supposed to die before the date of Mr. Macdowall's story, and respecting whose relations with his fair consort Gibbon gives some amusing particulars), as well as her empire, with surpassing vigour and rigour.

Longinus, the celebrated author of “The Suolime,” is rather Court as her Secretary; and, just at the time of the advance of the Roman Emperor Aurelian, best known to history as the conqueror of Palmyra and founder of Orléans (Aureliana), was about to be married to a fair Athenian, Eulœe. The girl is spirited away by the priests of Moloch, in order to be sacrificed as a propitiatory victim for the safety of their temple and treasures; but is rescued by Zenobia in person. She exiles the priests, who go over to the Romans, and betray to them the city. Zenobia's flight, after the fall of her capital, is arrested by her own capture; she is brought before Aurelian, in whose presence Eulœe, who has been robbed in the vicinity of the city, dies raving mad, and who orders out Longinus for instant execution.

The story is well told, and the rhythm, on which the author has evidently bestowed much pains, is generally flowing. Some of the monologues would bear curtailment; but, on the whole, the production is creditable, and Mr. Macdowall may be congratulated on his performance.

TINNED MEATS, FISH, AND FRUITS.†

In country houses far removed from towns “canned provisions” are well-nigh a necessity, and we gladly welcome these instructive little books, which contain a vast store of information respecting the choice of “brands,” and the best methods of cooking them when selected. The receipts are plain, clear, and intelligible to the humblest intellect, suitable alike for the cottage and the mansion. Equally useful are the hints for “invalid” cooking, which, it may be surmised, embody the experience of many years. The books only cost a few pence, and should command a large sale amongst the thousands who do not disdain information because it is cheap, or despise advice because it is lowly.

Messrs. Allen's “Royal Kalendar and Index for 1887” maintains the high standard of excellence which has for so many years characterised this useful publication. Of course mistakes will occur in a work of this nature, but they are reduced to a minimum. The only improvement which could be made would be an alphabetical arrangement of the Government offices, instead of the apparently arbitrary sequence in which they now follow one another.

Hazell's “Annual Cyclopædia for 1887” is as usual good, trustworthy, and revised to date. As a compendium of general information it stands second to none of its contemporaries, it, indeed, it does not eclipse them.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 28, 1887.

THE MAHARAJAH DHULEEP SINGH.

It is surely time that the public at home and in India should be told fully and frankly on official authority the truth, and the whole truth, concerning the case of the Maharajah Dhuleep Singh, who has now found a temporary home in the French capital, from which safe retreat he appears to be doing his best to create an agitation in the Punjab amongst such of the Sikh population as having nothing to lose hope to gain something in possible change or disturbance. To those who are not behind the scenes the spectacle of England's "show" Maharajah, who for so many years was held up to all other Maharajahs as a specimen of the miraculous results of Western culture and Christianity upon crude Native nature, posing now as an arch-rebel against English rule and as a pervert from the faith he was baptised in, is puzzling, to say the least of it. Nine people out of ten in both countries will hardly believe that so extraordinary a metamorphosis has been brought about by mere Eastern caprice or whim, and will, therefore be anxious to know what has happened between the British Government and the Maharajah to make the latter renounce all allegiance to the former and become its open and avowed enemy. For such he has now declared himself to be. His attempt to visit India for the purpose of stirring up strife in the Punjab was frustrated by his arrest at Aden, but it was a mistake upon the part of the English authorities to have permitted him to have gone so far upon a journey the seditious intention of which they were well aware of. Since his return he has taken up his abode in Paris, where he has been interviewed by the representative of a newspaper owned by a Bengali Babu and published in the French territory of Chandernagore, where its proprietor is beyond the reach of the Indian Penal Code. To this weekly organ of sedition the Maharajah contributes the following precious epistle through the medium of his interviewer:—

"I have no opinion to offer on the present situation and future of India, but shall frankly tell you what steps I have resolved on taking should certain events take place in the East. Most likely you are not aware that I have repudiated the Treaty of Annexation of the Punjab, which was extorted from me when I was a child of only some eleven years of age, by my guardians, the so-called 'Christian' British nation, and that I now take my stand upon a previous treaty, called the 'Bhyrowal Treaty' of 1846, under which solemn covenant England bound herself to maintain me on my throne till I attained my majority, and that, consequently, I am no longer a well-wisher of Great Britain, whose Government has been treating me so basely of late.

(Signed). "DHULEEP SINGH,

"The lawful Sovereign of the Sikhs, in virtue of the Treaty of Bhyrowal, 1846."

The editor of the print in question was, of course, delighted to receive such a mark of princely confidence in him, and has made the most of it in his comments on British injustice towards the Natives of India, especially towards those of royal rank. Nothing is extenuated, and everything is set down in malice to show that the heir of Runjit Singh, the Lion of the Punjab, was cajoled into signing a treaty which he did not understand, and was thus robbed of his territory and rights, besides being forced to adopt the religion of his persecutors. There is no hint of any shortcomings on the part of the Maharajah; all the blame for the breach which has occurred between his Highness and the British Government is placed to the account of the latter. Now, it is not likely that any letter from Maharajah Dhuleep Singh, or the comment of any Native editor thereon, will set the Punjab in a flame. The orthodox Sikhs would not accept him upon any terms, and were he in Lahore to-day trying to raise the standard of revolt his following would only consist of some of the budmashes of the bazaars. His friend, the Bengali editor, would hardly take service under the Khalsa banner which he would wish to unfold, but would remain in his safe hiding-place on the banks of the Hooghly and pen him commendations from Chandernagore. But this does not make the present state of things less of a scandal. Just now there is another Punjab noble in Paris, Suchet Singh of Chambá, who complains also of unjust treatment at the hands of the British Government. The Chandernagore paper has taken up his case also, and publishes a letter from a London solicitor, bringing all manner of charges against the India Office in reference to his claims. The publication of these matters cannot be confined to Chandernagore. French editors may not take much interest in the grievances of Indian Princes, but they will be glad to find a text for abusing English rule in the East, and they will readily give the hint—"Russian papers please copy." It is quite possible that Russian intrigue might find a way to utilise the troubles of these Punjab chiefs when, as the Maharajah writes, "certain events take place in the East." The attempt no doubt would fail to weaken English authority, or to shake the loyalty of the people of Northern India, but before the experiment be tried it could do no harm were the people of India made fully aware of the action of the British Government in the whole affair—showing that there has been no breach of faith or harsh treatment on its part towards the complainants. Silence will be misunderstood, and what is already a grave scandal will be allowed to grow. It was given out some time ago that a Blue-book containing an exhaustive and correct statement of the relations between the British Government and the Maharajah Dhuleep Singh, from the time of his falling into British hands until now, would be given to Parliament and the public, but no such publication has yet appeared. It ought not to be longer delayed, in justice to the Government itself and for the honour of the good name of England in the East. The Native chiefs and nobles there should be allowed to learn that the complaints made of harshness or injustice are without foundation, as it is to be hoped they are. But so long as only one side of the story is made current that side will sooner or later find many to accept it as the correct version. The reticence of the Government will be put down to fear of telling the truth. Nearly thirty years ago the Calcutta Review published an article recommending the Government of the day to take a leaf from the book of Roman polity and practice in dealing with the upper ten thousand of Native Indian society by encouraging—nay, almost forcing Native princes and noblemen to visit England for the beneficial results which would follow in making them "wiser and better men." They would return, according to the writer, "to be firmer allies, truer and more active friends, more intelligent citizens, and more loyal subjects." And the article concluded by pointing proudly to the good effect which English influence had had upon one Native prince: "Dhuleep Singh is an intelligent and exemplary Christian." This was the text chosen by the Reviewer for his homily in 1858; the Maharajah's letter, which we have given above, is a strange commentary upon it in 1887.

ECCLESIASTICAL RETRENCHMENT.—According to a Calcutta paper, the Finance Committee has recommended a very considerable retrenchment in connection with the Ecclesiastical Department, and adds:—"The total grant is £208,000 a year, and this sum the Church of England shares with the Church of Scotland and the Church of Rome, the last named receiving no less than £63,000 as its portion. There are fifty-seven clergy in the Calcutta diocese, besides a large number of voluntary agencies. The Church Missionary Society is represented in the diocese by sixty-eight clergy, of whom twelve are Natives, and the S.P.G. by twenty-four, of whom ten are Natives, besides fourteen Native pastors in the Mission in Chota Nagpur. Here, too, as in the Madras, Bombay, Rangoon, and Lahore dioceses, an additional Clergy Society provides for the wants of stations unsupplied with Government Chaplains; while the Oxford Mission is labouring among the educated classes in the city of Calcutta and thirty-five lay helpers are engaged in evangelistic work. A Diocesan Council with four Boards for Church extension, finance, education, and mission, respectively serves as a central organisation for all these enterprises."

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

ASSISTANT Adjutant-Generals for Musketry will in future be allowed to sign railway warrants for their charger, two attendants, a peon, and office records when they proceed on tours of inspection.

THE RIGHT HON. ROBERT BOURKE, the Governor of Madras, has accepted the Honorary Colonelcy of the Nilgiri Volunteer Rifles and Madras Guards.

THE 30th Madras Infantry Headquarter Wing having been ordered to Moulmein in relief of the 9th Regiment, the wing of the 7th Madras will now be located at Rangoon.

NATIVE soldiers of the Bombay army, after three years' service, will be allowed to claim their discharge in time of peace if their regiment is within ten per cent. of its establishment.

THE Coorg Volunteer Rifle Corps having been transferred from the Government of India to the Madras Government, has been attached for administrative purposes to the Bangalore Rifle Volunteers, and Lieut.-Colonel C. J. Pearse, Staff Corps, has been appointed Commandant.

COLONEL A. MCGOWN, Madras Staff Corps, has retired from the Service, and Lieut.-Colonel I. M. D. Lewes, 2nd Punjab Infantry, now at home, is about to return to the Service.

THE following appears in General Orders of the 27th ultimo:— "It has recently come to the notice of his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief that in a very large proportion of regiments serving in India a branch of the Soldiers' Total Abstinence Association is worked by non-commissioned officers and privates without the knowledge and countenance of the Commanding Officer. Sir Frederick Roberts wishes it to be understood that not only is the cause recognised by Government, but that he is himself interested in the good work being done by the Association and that he desires to see its extension and further success; but at the same time his Excellency considers it undesirable that any society should exist in a regiment, in however laudable a cause, without the cognisance and approval of the Commanding Officer. The Commander-in-Chief therefore desires that where branches of the association exist they should be fully recognised as regimental institutions; and should in future be worked through the Commanding Officer instead of in direct communication with the Secretary to the Association. It is also desirable that the books and accounts of the regimental branch should be periodically produced at orderly room for the Commanding Officer's inspection and signature. Sir Frederick Roberts hopes that Commanding Officers will as far as possible assist the branches of the association existing in their regiments by placing vacant rooms at their disposal, and by affording them such other facilities as may tend to encourage the movement."

It has been notified, with reference to Army Regulations, India Vol. VII. Dress, that five years from the date of I.A.C. clause 161 of 1886, are allowed for the introduction of any new articles of dress or equipment laid down by those regulations.

THE destination of the 3rd Regiment Madras Light Infantry, has been altered from Secunderabad to Madras.

COLONEL H. G. SAUNDERS, Military Accounts Department, who proceeded on leave from Bombay, has, on return to India, been posted to Madras.

MAJOR W. A. YULE, A.Q.M.G., Hyderabad Subsidiary Force, has been ordered to Ootacamund for duty in the Office of the Quartermaster-General, and Lieut.-Colonel S. E. Atkinson, D.A.Q.M.G., has been transferred from the Ceded District to the Hyderabad Subsidiary Force as a temporary arrangement.

LIEUT. J. R. P. GORDON, 15th Hussars, has been appointed Aide-de-Camp to Major-General G. L. Gordon, C.B., R.A., Commanding Burma Division.

LIEUT. F. C. BOEHMER, 2nd Battalion Bedford Regiment, has been appointed Adjutant of the Madras Railway Volunteers.

CAPTAIN PEACOCKE, Royal Engineers, Intelligence Branch, Afghan Boundary, has been allowed to detain his departmental rank of Deputy Assistant Quartermaster-General while employed on the reports made by him when with the Mission.

OFFICERS of Royal Engineers, who have elected or who may hereafter elect for continuous Indian service either in a civil or military appointment, will be eligible only for non-regulation passages in troopships. Subaltern officers are, however, not disqualified by their election for continuous Indian service from passages at public expense or passage-money on proceeding to England on medical certificate.

OFFICERS of Royal Engineers are not eligible to join the Civil Engineers' Provident Fund.

THE Duchess of Connaught studies Hindustani with a Moonshee two hours every day, and now speaks the language possibly well. When visiting Ahmedabad the other day, with H.R.H. the Commander-in-Chief of the Bombay Army, the Duchess was enabled to talk with some Native ladies in their own tongue.

BENGAL.

A FAREWELL DINNER is to be given to Colonel W. S. Trevor, V.C., by the officers of the Public Works Departments, at the Dalhousie Institute, Calcutta.

THE second Membership of the Bengal Board of Revenue will be vacant this hot weather, as Mr. H. J. Reynolds takes six months' leave from March 25. The officiating appointment will probably not be determined until after Sir Stuart Bayley's arrival in Calcutta.

THE Government of India are inviting tenders for a steamer service once in four weeks from Calcutta to Port Blair and thence to Nancowry (Carmorta) and back via Port Blair, Rangoon and Port Blair to Calcutta. The steamers may also be required to call at Cocca, and occasionally at the Krishna light vessel. The contract will begin on the 1st January, 1888.

THERE has been a notable improvement in the mortality in the jails of Bengal during 1886. The average jail population in 1885 was 13,483, and the number of deaths 826; while in 1886 the corresponding figures were 13,233 and 511. In the Hazaribagh Jail the deaths fell from 102 in 1885 to 14 in 1886, but this is partly accounted for by a decrease in the number of inmates. At Alipur the deaths fell from 109 to 44; at Rajshahye from 126 to 57, at Julpigoree from 20 to 6. In these instances the number of inmates was nearly stationary.

THE Mahomedans of Patna embraced the opportunity afforded by the recent visit of Sir Rivers Thompson to Dumraon to present a valedictory address to his Honour. The Mahomedans have special reason for thinking well of the Lieutenant Governor who is leaving them. Recognising that it is only by education that they can hold their place beside the other races, he has founded scholarships for them at the Calcutta University, has given grants-in-aid to the Anglo-Arabic School at Patna, and has appointed a commission to inquire into the employment of their educational endowments. He has shown his belief in their capacities by urging their larger admittance to Government service; and he has emphasised it by several appointments to good posts therein.

NORTH-WEST PROVINCES, OUDH AND PUNJAB.

CAPTAIN J. MONTGOMERY, Director of Settlements and Revenue Records in the Punjab, goes home on leave shortly. Mr. E. B. Steedman, C.S., now on furlough, will most likely officiate for him.

THE cultivation of cotton in the North-West Provinces and Oudh in 1886 shows a large increase over that of the previous year. The area cultivated was 1,861,122 acres, against 1,655,147 acres in 1885. This increase is attributed chiefly to the early setting in of the monsoon and a generally favourable season, but it is to some extent discounted by the fact that last year the crops over large tracts were destroyed by flood. The total output is estimated at about 45,000 tons, and, after showing allowance for local consumption, it is estimated that there will be 30,000 tons available for exports.

THE number of civilians in the North-West Provinces who are about to take leave during the coming year appears likely to be larger than usual. Two judges, Messrs. L. Upolt and Macmillan; seven magistrates, Messrs. Cornwall, Whalley, Fisher, G. Williams, Robinson, J. White, and Wells; and three joint magistrates, Messrs. Wyer, Rustumjee, and Macleod, have, it is stated, signified their intention of taking furlough. Already Messrs. Cornwall and Macleod have started on a year's leave, Messrs. Fisher and Williams take 20 months' furlough, Mr. Macmillan 17 months, Messrs. White, Wells, and Rustumjee 8 months, and Messrs. Robinson and Wyer 6 months. These temporary vacancies will give twelve officiating promotions, while the retirements of Messrs. Oldfield, Leeds, J. Smith, and Steinbelt will afford three or four permanent steps; so the juniors in the service may hope for some compensation for the income-tax and the eighteen-penny rupee. "Civilians under eight years' standing," says the Allahabad paper, "are already very well off; but those of from ten to twenty years' standing are still suffering severely from the over-recruitment of the earlier years."

MADRAS.

MR. F. N. THOROWGOOD, the Superintendent of the Madras Harbour Works, has requested the Government to accept his resignation. He repudiates the views entertained by the Port Trustees as to their control over his office.

ONE of the reductions to be carried out on the recommendation of the Finance Committee in Madras is the abolition of the Printing Department of the High Court, as it has been found that the work done there can be executed more cheaply by typewriting and typolithography.

THE people at Tinnevely have, through a local champion, Mr. Peter Pillai, been working up a grievance in the Press with regard to the restrictions caused by the Forest regulations on the pasturage of cattle in that district. Lieut. Colonel Walker, the Conservator of Forests, has, however, written to the papers to show that there is no truth in the charges that are made. Instead of any fresh restrictions having been placed on cattle grazing in the Tinnevely forest since the passing of the Forest Act, much greater liberty, it is stated, has been allowed, free of charge, the only condition imposed being that no fires should be lighted. But within three months from the date of the concession the forests had suffered from fires to the extent of many thousands of rupees. Still the concession has not been withdrawn, as the Madras Government is most anxious to do all it can to promote the welfare of the rayats in the neighbourhood of forests.

THE Madras casket which is to be presented to the Queen on the occasion of the Jubilee will be of ivory and gold—ivory being used for the framework, and gold for the panels, and other embellishment. The front is to be divided into five equal panels filled with gold repoussé work, beneath which are five smaller panels boldly carved in ivory. The ends are similarly divided into panels, two of gold and two of ivory. Above the gold panels is an elaborate cornice, supported by gryphons, carved in ivory. The lid is mainly of ivory, richly carved, and surmounted by a gryphon in gold. The casket rests on six gold tortoises. The dimensions are length 12½ inches, width 5½ inches, height 7½ inches. The cost will be about Rs. 4,000. The cover of the proposed memorial volume will be of sandalwood overlaid with repoussé silver wood. Five lotus flowers, conventionally treated, and connected with bands of mouldings, divide the surface into twelve panels. These are filled with various designs of birds, gryphons, and foliage, characteristic of South Indian ornamental work. The dimensions of the cover are, length 24 inches and width 18 inches, and the cost will be about Rs. 1,000. The volume will contain a narrative of the celebration of the Jubilee throughout the Madras Presidency, provided honorary secretaries of district committees are so obliging as to comply with the central committee's invitation for descriptions of the manner in which the event was celebrated under the auspices of their committees. It will be profusely illustrated with photographs of towns, buildings, and peoples of the Presidency.

BOMBAY.

MR. LALMOHUN GHOSE arrived in Bombay by the Austro-Hungarian Lloyd's steamer Amphitrite from Trieste.

THE Rev. W. E. Scott, Chaplain of Nusseerabad, has been appointed Domestic Chaplain to the Bishop of Bombay during his lordship's forthcoming tour of visitation to Guzerat.

THE Municipal bye-election held in Ward A, in consequence of the absence of Dr. E. F. Underwood in England, resulted in a "walk over" for his brother, Dr. C. F. Underwood, who was proposed by Dr. Blaney and seconded by Mr. Damodhur Thakersey Mooljee.

THE Bombay season reports for the past week show that the reaping of late kharif and early rabi crops is going on in several districts. The standing crops have been injured by blight in some parts of the Deccan and Southern Mahratta country, and by frost and insects in parts of Hyderabad, Kurnachee, and the Panth Mahals. Fever and cattle disease prevail in parts of eleven, and smallpox in parts of five districts.

ON Wednesday afternoon the plant, machinery and the building of the New Dhurrumsey Poonjabhoy Spinning and Weaving Company were put up for auction sale at the office of Messrs. Nanu and Hormusjee, solicitors, Meadows-street. The bidding commenced at Rs. 8,00,000, which sum was eventually increased to Rs. 8,55,000. This sum was not considered satisfactory, and accordingly the solicitors of the company intimated to those present that the reserved bid had not been reached, and the matter of the sale would accordingly be referred to the High Court.

THE Bombay Corporation have decided to inform Government that they regret that the Municipal Act will not permit of them contributing to the proposed Imperial Institute, but at the same time expressing their firm conviction that the undertaking was one which was in every way worthy of the support of the citizens. On the motion of Mr. Doshihoy Framjee, it was also decided to take legal opinion as to whether it was in the power of the Municipality to make the grant of Rs. 80,000 towards the local technical institute in the way proposed. In the event of there being a legal barrier to making the gift in the way originally intended, it was pointed out that there were other modes of rendering the nascent institution the proposed assistance.

It is a curious fact, says the Civil and Military Gazette, that the gun and pistol-makers of Belgium should find it worth their while to send by post elaborate illustrated catalogues and price lists, giving wholesale and retail rates for military rifles, pistols and every variety of firearms, to Native dealers and artisans in our Lahore bazaars. If the free importation of these arms is permitted, it is surprising that a larger quantity is not to be found in the market. If the importation is forbidden, why are these dangerous goods advertised so extensively? asks our contemporary.

Miscellaneous.

THE JUBILEE.—The celebration of the Jubilee is the subject of an article in the Hindoo Patriot of a practical nature. Queen Victoria's subjects, says the writer, rejoice most cordially at this era of her glorious reign, and will manifest their feeling in the best way they can. "His Excellency the Viceroy very justly says, in his letter of instruction to local Governments: 'His Excellency in Council is assured that the executive authorities may on this occasion safely yield the initiative to the spontaneous action of Municipal Councils and of the community at large, and that the unanimous voice of the Empire will gratefully tender to Her Majesty the Queen-Empress a homage worthy of the noble charity of her life and the justice and benevolence of her reign.'" The Patriot points out that the advantage of this course will be that with unity of purpose there will be considerable diversity in the manner of its manifestation. "The mode of rejoicing for the masses should be manifest, sensuous, immediately beneficial, and exhilarating, or it will cease to be a rejoicing." The writer has nothing to say against the Imperial Institute, but would be glad to see it realised, only "there is a sense of incongruousness in calling for subscriptions in Bengal for an Institute in London, as subscriptions for 'public rejoicings' in Bengal, which we cannot readily shake off. We do not in the least object to our Indian chiefs and moneyed men contributing freely out of their superfluity to the aid of the Imperial Institute; nay, we would urge them to do so, for the Institute is deserving of every encouragement; but we demur to the amalgamation of the two objects, to call for subscriptions for 'public rejoicings,' and then to take away a good portion of them for a memorial in a distant country." Our contemporary thinks that three ideas being afloat, they should be kept perfectly separate and distinct. The "local rejoicings" at the celebration should stand apart altogether, both from the Imperial Institute at home, and any Indian memorial that may eventually be determined upon.

The Gazette of India contains a long resolution by the Governor-General in Council on the subject of provincial contracts. The Government of India after explaining its responsibilities, says it cannot give up its prior claims upon the revenues from which they are to be met, and as it is obliged to consider not merely the circumstances of each province taken by itself, but the relative claims of all upon the common fund, it cannot undertake to make the demands of each Government the sole standard by which to determine the financial position in which the new contract should place it. Provincial Governments are, however, assured the amount needful to cover all assigned expenditure. "The Provincial Governments," the resolution observes, "enjoys the great advantage of being relieved from all consideration of questions of ways and means. The Government of India undertakes to provide the actual cash required from time to time to meet their drawings for expenditure. But the Government of India has to consider and make its arrangements at the beginning of each year, with reference to the estimates which it accepts on the proposals of the Local Governments, and it would be impossible to work under a system which allowed local Governments, at their free will, to set aside their own deliberate scheme of expenditure and to call upon the Central Government without any notice to furnish the money required for new and unprovided outlay.

MR. CHARLES DU VAL has completely recovered from the indisposition that brought his London season to an abrupt termination, and has reappeared in Dublin. He has made a great success in the Irish metropolis, and it has been found quite impossible to accommodate the large audiences which have nightly assembled there. Mr. H. Verne, late of Maskelyne and Cooke's entertainment, and the Lilliputian Magis are in the programme.

LIBERALITY OF A NATIVE GENTLEMAN.—An act of much generosity on the part of a Native gentleman is worthy of record. This liberal-minded landlord has resolved to utilize on works of public utility the nuzurs recently contributed by his ryots, supplementing the amount with a large donation from himself. In one mahal in this way Rs. 8,000 are to be devoted to digging eight tanks and building a mosque; in another Rs. 5,000 are to be applied to digging a tank, or building a mosque or dispensary, road, bridge, or ghat, as may be decided by the people themselves; in another Rs. 2,000, and another Rs. 1,500, are to be utilised in the same fashion; while three mahals are to be provided each with Rs. 3,000 for the same purpose. These benefactions will be heard of with the less surprise when it is stated that the benefactor in question is Nawab Ahsanullah of Dacca.

SIR EDWARD BUCK, B.S.C., has arrived in Madras on a special mission from the Government of India to inquire into the Survey and Settlement arrangement in the Southern Presidency.

MR. FITZPATRICK, acting Chief Commissioner of the Central Provinces, succeeds Mr. Crosthwaite as representative of the Government of India on the Public Service Commission.

THE reception which the Roman Catholic community gave the Papal Delegate at Calcutta on Friday was brilliant and enthusiastic. Special preparations were made at the Roman Catholic Cathedral. The main entrances were decorated with triumphal arches. Mr. Woodroffe welcomed Monsignor Agliardi in the name of the community. The Delegate replied, and thanked all for the reception. He was sure his Holiness the Pope would be consoled in their sentiments of gratitude and thankfulness towards him for establishing the Catholic hierarchy in India. They might be sure that in consoling the Vicar of Christ would find favour and a blessing from Christ himself. The reception concluded by a solemn service. The Delegate stays for about a week, and leaves for China. An untoward incident happened at the close of the service. Festoons of small lamps were lighted about and around the grand altar, and one of the festoons hanging from the roof to the altar rail caught fire. The panic which ensued baffles description. A rush was made for the doors; women fainted; benches were overthrown and broken. Monsignor Goethals with great presence of mind came up to the altar rails, and sought the congregation not to be alarmed, as the matter was one of small import. Whilst making this request several of those about the altar managed to pull down the flaming festoons. No further damage was done.

MR. FORBES ADAM, the Chairman of the Bombay Chamber of Commerce, has taken exception to the principle, or want of principle, suggested by the recent selection of Mr. Hardie, Secretary and Treasurer of the Bank of Bengal, to succeed the late Mr. J. R. Bullen Smith in the Council of India. Like Mr. Adam, says the Pioneer, we would rather congratulate Mr. Hardie on his good fortune than cavil at the cause of it. Nevertheless there is much force in Mr. Adam's contention. If the appointment is, as it pretends to be, designed to secure a good representative of the commercial intelligence of India, the Chambers of Commerce, which are supposed to focus it, might advantageously be consulted about the selection. Were the various Chambers invited on these occasions to send up the name of a representative man, such a recommendation, sent through the Government of India, must at any rate carry considerable weight with it. We should be disposed to go even a little further, as a step in the right direction, and suggest that the importance of the Trades Associations of the three Presidencies, which often differ from the more distinguished organisations by dealing with public questions more energetically, might well entitle them to some notice in the same connection.

There is also an Account of Anglo-Indian Periodical Literature, and a brief Sketch of Sporting Literature in India, in which many well-known and distinguished Anglo-Indians are mentioned.

The object of the above work (originally published in 1876) is to give, in a convenient form, sketches of some of the distinguished men who have materially assisted in building up the fabric of our great Indian Empire. The London Press bestowed a considerable amount of praise on the former little volume, the Standard remarking that it should have been twice the size; while the Friend of India said that "every Anglo-Indian should read" what a London journal styled "a deeply interesting volume."

*The sketches have now been more than doubled

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

A MAGAZINE THAT GIVES EXPRESSION

TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF THE PEOPLE OF
INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing MONTHLY (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

THE CALCUTTA REVIEW.

(The only Quarterly Review in India.)

ESTABLISHED 1844.

OPINIONS.

The Calcutta Review for October reached us a day or two ago, and a glance at its contents shows that the number more than sustains the reputation which this old and favourite publication is again achieving. The Review is rapidly regaining the position which it ... there is no fear of the Indian Review, or the Asiatic Quarterly rivalling it in public favour. —Statesman, October, 1886.

... The best service which I ever rendered in India, or, indeed, for India, was the establishment, single-handed, of the Calcutta Review, which has done far more for Indian literature than anything I have written under my own name. —J. W. KAYE, Athenaeum Club, June 23, 1872.

The Calcutta Review has given us valuable articles on the army. Some from the pen of Sir Henry Lawrence, who wrote with the spirit of prophecy, of the coming storm of which he was one of the noblest victims. —Address of the C-in-C. at the U.S. Inst. of India.

... The Calcutta Review has not only throughout its career reflected the highest honour on its public-spirited promoters and its well-known distinguished contributors, but has done much to help forward the reconstruction of our system of governing India. —Westminster Review.

NAVAL AND MILITARY GAZETTE

ESTABLISHED 1833.

EVERY SATURDAY. PRICE SIXPENCE.

The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette has acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent course of its staff of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A series of Illustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" freely opens its correspondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for interchange of opinion is afforded, such as is offered by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supplements."

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" circulates largely throughout India and the Colonies. It is supplied direct to the Army and Marine bureaux of the French, Russian, and other Governments, and it is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Services, especially of the German, French, and American Armies, who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, MARCH 7, 1887.

General Intelligence.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 18th February; from Allahabad and Madras to the 16th February; and from Calcutta to the 15th February.

THE Queen's Jubilee has been celebrated throughout India with the greatest possible enthusiasm.

STATES have vied with states, provinces with provinces, and cities with cities in demonstrations of loyalty to the Queen, the rejoicings being as general and as heartfelt in the Native States as in British territory.

IN nearly every town and city the enthusiasm of the people has assumed a very practical form, and works of public utility, such as technical institutes, libraries, schools, industrial and art workshops, public parks and gardens, &c., have been inaugurated in honour of the Jubilee. In other places local taxes have been remitted or abolished, and the revenues derived from Municipal fees, &c., devoted to the purposes of permanent memorials.

REPORTS have reached Mandalay of the massing of Chinese troops just within Chinese territory, and of the despatch of Chinese emissaries to contiguous Shan States requiring their allegiance.

THE ribbon for the Burma medal will be a very distinctive one—probably old gold edged with dark red, which would be appropriate, as yellow is the royal colour of Burma.

THE Viceroy, as at present arranged, leaves Calcutta on the 23rd proximo. His Excellency may make one or two halts en route to Simla; but arrangements on this head are unsettled.

It is expected that a decision regarding the entrenched position in Peshin and the defences generally of that section of the frontier will be arrived at after the Commander-in-Chief's visit next month. Major Nicholson, Secretary to the Defence Committee, who is now on his way to Simla from Burma, will accompany Sir Frederick Roberts to Peshin.

LATEST accounts describe the state of affairs in Cashmere as satisfactory. The new Governor of Cashmere is said to be doing very well. He is a man of fair education, knows and speaks English well, and is firm and upright.

It is now positively announced that Mr. A. Mackenzie succeeds to the Chief Commissionership of the Central Provinces; Mr. A. P. MacDonell being thereby confirmed in the Home Secretaryship.

CHOLERA has broken out among the 44th Gurkha Light Infantry in the Upper Chindwin Valley. Some thirty deaths have occurred.

THE Indian Midland Railway Company have decided to construct a line of about forty-eight miles from a point on the Great Indian Peninsula line to Saugor. The work will be commenced immediately.

COLONEL W. A. J. WALLAGE, R.E., and Mr. A. C. Cregeen, C.E., have just been prospecting the country from Saugor, through Damoh to Kutni, a length of about 116 miles, over which it is proposed to construct a line, and which the Indian Midland Company might be called on to make in terms of their contract. The professional report is believed not to be favourable to the project.

THE area of the Rawul Pindi cantonment will shortly be considerably extended; and the next year or two will, in all probability, see the garrison increased to 10,000 men.

WITH regard to recent operations in Burma nothing of very great importance has transpired. There have been a few minor encounters between our troops and the rebels, in which the latter have, without exception, been defeated, but not with severe loss, as they have invariably fled on attack. From the North-Eastern Frontier, however, comes the intelligence of a brutal raid made by Kukis on the village of Monkoo, on the right bank of the Chindwin, about a mile from Kendat, in which eleven heads were taken, besides prisoners. The Chins also have committed a raid. They came down on Manshee, in the Chindwin Valley, and succeeded in carrying off some women and children. Subsequently they attacked Auksong, but were repulsed by our troops, under Captain Stevens, losing their chief.

IN the Viceregal Legislative Council held at Calcutta the Hon. Mr. Scoble moved that the Bill to amend the Indian Companies Act be passed. The Hon. Mr. Scoble also moved for and obtained leave to introduce a Bill to amend the law relating to Courts in Lower Burma. He said the Government had decided to constitute at Rangoon a Chief Court similar to the Chief Court at Lahore, abolishing the Recorder's Court, the Court of the Judicial Commissioner and Special Court, and constituting a new Chief Court as the Court of ultimate resort in India for Lower Burma. The Chief Court will consist of three or more Judges at least, one of whom must be a barrister of five years' standing. The Barrister Judge will be styled Recorder, and one of the other Judges Judicial Commissioner. The Hon. General Chesney moved that the Select Committee's report on the Bill to abolish Military Courts of Requests be taken into consideration. He said the inquiries made of Local Governments had satisfied the Select Committee that creditors would have sufficient remedy against debtors in the courts of the country. The Bill did not affect Native officers. The Bill was passed.

OBITUARY.—The Rev. Benjamin Rice, of the London Mission, Bangalore; the Raja of Tekri, Gurhwal District.

Notes of the Week.

THE information which has been given "by authority" to the Press, to the effect that Her Majesty will lay the foundation stone of the Imperial Institute on the Jubilee celebration day here, will be received with much satisfaction in India, and will stimulate the energies of intending donors to the fund. But whilst the object of the proposed Institute is being fully explained for the benefit of Englishmen at home or in the Colonies, no harm would be done if an attempt were made to be as explicit in India as to the way in which it is proposed that that Empire should be represented, and as to how far the money being received from that country shall be devoted towards exhibiting and encouraging Indian industries which we all say we are so anxious to see developed. India should in the Imperial Institute have a definite assigned position; but in the speeches which have been delivered of late in London and in the provinces little or no mention is made of India at all.

REUTER and the Times correspondent seem to draw their Indian information from different sources. The former, in a telegram from Calcutta dated March 6th, states that "some criticism has been excited here by the fact that the evidence given before the Public Service Commission was almost exclusively that of officials. It is pointed out that neither merchants, traders, landowners, or others having a stake in the country attended the sittings of the Commission, the evidence before which was chiefly official, or that furnished by the Native literary class. It is, therefore, urged that further evidence should be taken, as it is thought that the results obtained by the Commission may lead to a premature introduction of a large Native element into the Government."

THE Times correspondent, telegraphing under the same date, gives the names of some of the leading merchants who have been examined before the Commission at Calcutta, and it is already on record that representatives of the classes named by Reuter as having been left out of the inquiry have tendered evidence which has been made no secret of. The dread of "the premature introduction of a large Native element into the Government" would appear to be the inspiration of some nervous official not quite sure of his own seat in the saddle.

THAT there must and will be an increase in the Native element into the local administrations is certain, but it will hardly be premature. The necessity has been recognised for a long time by all who have given the matter any thought free from race or other prejudice. But concessions which would only be fair and right need not be construed into radical changes, encouraging the idea that India is about to be handed over to Native rule.

A WRITER whose sympathies are certainly not against the Natives puts the whole matter simply and shortly that by no sort of process can the people of India be given self-government in the same way as the people of England. "We can do so by clearing out of the country and allowing them all to do as they please, but we cannot do it by staying there to maintain the distinctive benefits of our occupation, while declining the responsibility of enforcing the principles on which they depend. While we—and we alone—prevent India from being plunged into a mad struggle among diverse races and creeds for ascendancy, the Government of India must in all essentials be carried on upon English, not Native, principles, and by English, not Native, administrators. Those who insist on governing themselves must take the burden of defending themselves; and that is the last thing that enters into the conceptions of the noisy people who clamour in the Native Press for place and power."

COLONEL J. DREW-GAY, the well-known war correspondent of the Daily Telegraph, and who has travelled in many lands, and knows from actual experience of what he is writing about, has been contributing lately some valuable papers to an evening contemporary on the defenceless state of Aden and Singapore, which ought to attract general attention. Sierra Leone, Trincomalee, Port Louis, and other places have had enormous sums spent on them for fortifications, and surprise is naturally expressed at the neglect which Aden and Singapore have experienced at the hands of the responsible authorities. "Of what use," he asks, "would all Egypt be to us if Aden were taken? And yet we throw money and blood to the wind for Egypt, and leave Aden to take its chance with Trincomalee, Santa Lucia, or Sierra Leone."

His remarks about the helpless condition of Singapore are still stronger:—

It lies at the foot of the Malay Peninsula, on which are situate the great Burmese appanage of the Crown, the very friendly kingdom of Siam, and the most valuable tributary State of Johore, which is already largely cultivated by Scotchmen and Englishmen. More than this, it is the central coaling-station for our navy and great mercantile marine steaming in Eastern waters. The long lines of coaling sheds that cover its wharves convey but a slight idea of its importance, vast as they are, for they are being constantly replenished by colliers from England and Australia. But when it is known that often three or four thousand tons of coal a day are put on board steamers going east and west some notion may be formed of its value as a coaling station. Were it taken from us there is no point between Colombo and Hong Kong on the one hand, or between either of these two ports and Australia on the other, where our ironclads and cruisers could replenish their coal supplies. And when it is borne in mind that such an ironclad as the Impérieuse carries but 450 tons a'l told, and that were she to steam rapidly for a few days this stock would be used up, the ordinary reader can see what the loss of Singapore would mean.

A question on this subject was asked in the House a few evenings ago, but the answer given was as unsatisfactory as the defenceless state of the place referred to.

If English manufacturers cannot turn out swords and bayonets which will neither break nor bend our military authorities had better go to the East for the supply of such weapons. Our contemporary Iron recommends applying to Japan:—

Neither Sheffield nor Birmingham, with all their skill, is able to turn out a sword blade which can be compared with the wonderful swords of Japan. For fineness of temper and keenness of edge they are unequaled in the modern world, and can scarcely be matched by the blades formerly forged in Damascus and Toledo. A common feat for a Japanese soldier is to cut a pig in two at a single blow; and bars of lead, and even of iron, have been divided by these weapons without a notch or imperfection being visible on the blade. While not possessing the marvellous dexterity of Sikh swordsmen the Japanese would be most formidable adversaries in hand-to-hand fighting. A sword of superior excellence is preserved as a heirloom in the Satsuma family, and with this blade a leaf floating on the stream has been cut in two by merely being allowed to drift against the edge. The fact is, the Japanese understand the tempering of sword blades better than any other people.

We can believe much, if not all, of what has been said about the inferiority of English swords, and the superiority of those of other countries, but the story of this Satsuma sword is, to quote Sam Slick, "a little hard to swallow, and requires some force of evidence to make it go down." It would take more than one Indian "joot-wallah" to beat it.

It is satisfactory to find that the well-known foundry and engineering works at Roorkee in the North-West Provinces have been made over to a Company to be carried on with new capital and energy. This act of the Government of India is an instalment it is to be hoped of that wise policy so often and so consistently advocated in the Indian Press of withdrawal by the State from competition with private enterprise. The valuable and extensive works ceded have been for many years carried on solely by Government funds under the Public Works Department; and, notwithstanding the many disadvantages of this connection, the profits were considerable and increasing. Freed from official trammels "the Roorkee Foundry and Engineering Company," whose prospectus is now before the public, takes the field under most favourable auspices. It has secured possession of the property under a fair contract with the Government of India, who will continue to it an independent support, while the local Government has promised to give all assistance in its power. The business is a great and growing one, and the possession of Roorkee means the possession of extensive and clear ground remote from any other competing establishment. The strong Board of Direction composed of Anglo-Indians well known and respected is a guarantee of the soundness of the scheme which investors will not be slow to recognise, and the figures at which anticipated profits are put down (6 per cent. on Debentures and 9 per cent. on Shares) are calculated at a very modest estimate. It is to be hoped that this is the harbinger of other undertakings which will attract English capital to India, where it will find in many directions a sure, safe and handsome return for its outlay, and India still be the gainer.

WE (Bombay Gazette) commend to the notice of Lord Randolph Churchill, or of any other member of Parliament who thinks that a good deal of money might be saved on our military and naval expenditure if only the laying out thereof were conducted upon common-sense business principles, a pretty little piece of wastefulness of which Indian waters have recently been the scene. Some weeks ago H.M.S. Briton broke down near Zanzibar, and had to be brought to Bombay for repairs to her boilers. The repairs were duly carried out, at what cost some inquiring M.P. may find it easier to discover than we can; and when they were quite finished, and all the money that the case required had been laid out, it occurred to someone that the Briton being twenty-six years old, the condition of her hull might be looked into. The results of the examination were not favourable, and the powers that be have decided that at the end of her commission, three months hence, she shall be brought back from Aden, whither she will proceed shortly after cruising about the Maldives, and sell in Bombay to whoever cares to buy her. We strongly suggest to inquiring M.P.'s that they should get Lord George Hamilton to produce the bill for repairs, so that we may know whether or not the hap'orth of tar was too dear for the ship whose career it was to prolong for three months.

(BY TELEGRAPH.)
(Times Correspondents.)
INDIA.

CALCUTTA, MARCH 6.

The Public Service Commission completed the first portion of its labours on Friday. Sir C. Aitchison started for Lahore the same evening, and most of the members have returned to their own presidencies. The Commission, however, is not yet dissolved. It is understood that the secretary will spend the summer at Simla in arranging and analysing the evidence taken, while a small sub-committee will prosecute inquiries regarding various departments not yet touched, such as the financial, the telegraph, the postal, the forests, the public works, &c. The entire Commission will reassemble at Calcutta next winter for the purpose of considering and preparing its report.

A great mass of evidence was taken during the fortnight's sitting in Calcutta. As regards the Native witnesses, nearly all agree in condemning the existing Statutory Civil Service and recommending that greater facilities should be given to Natives for entering the Covenanted Service, either by raising the minimum limit of age for competition or by holding examinations in India, and generally in proposing that steps should be taken largely to increase the Native element in the public service.

The European witnesses examined last week, like those heard in the previous week, showed considerable differences of opinion. Mr. Prinsep, Judge of the Calcutta High Court, said that the Statutory Service was generally disapproved of because sufficient regard had not been paid to the educational qualifications of the persons appointed. He would retain the present system of holding examinations for the Covenanted Service in England and the present age limit. He would extend the statutory definition of "Natives of India" so as to include Eurasians and Europeans domiciled in India. He thought it would not be safe to increase the number of Native judges, since for some reason or other Natives were not successful as criminal judges or magistrates. He believed the people of India did not desire any extensive increase of Native officers or that large powers should be conferred on them. The pressure came rather from those who hoped to enter the Government service; but the real question was how far such appointments could be conferred with proper regard to the efficiency of the public service and the stability of the Government. He had always been impressed by the want of confidence in Native officials shown by their own countrymen, and he believed that the vast majority would always prefer to have their cases tried by Europeans. Moreover, it had been found necessary to change Native officials after a service of three or four years in one district because they acquired local ties which impaired their usefulness.

Mr. Finucane, Director of Agriculture, Bengal, said that after fifteen years' experience, with special opportunities of forming an opinion as to settlement officers and managers of Government wards' estates, he believed that more oppression of the Native poorer classes by the Native landholding classes had been committed in Behar during the past ten years than in Ireland during the last fifty years. He added that, notwithstanding this, not a single voice in the Press of Behar and not a single public association had ever said one word to denounce this oppression. Nearly all the Native officials either were, or hoped to become landlords. Their interest, therefore, were directly antagonistic to those of the cultivators. The Europeans had no such interest; hence he preferred European officials, and would view with alarm the wider employment of Natives in high offices.

Sir Alexander Wilson, Sheriff of Calcutta, and senior partner in the mercantile firm of Jardine, Skinner and Co., said that he had wide experience of the country, and he thought the present strength of European civil officers should not be reduced. He believed that the substitution of a cheap Native agency would result in much distrust, and tend to reduce the amount of English capital that was being invested in India. Speaking with reference to his own business, he thought the Natives did excellent work under European supervision, but when that supervision was removed the result was not satisfactory. Trade and commerce were almost entirely due to European energy. He found many Natives worthy of trust in pecuniary matters, but he failed to find the traits of energy and self-reliance.

Mr. James Henderson, partner in the firm of George Henderson and Co., said his firm did a large business in jute. He had some years before tried Native supervision, but the experiment had not proved a success. Europeans were paid more highly, but their actual cost was less, as fewer men were required and more work was done. During the thirty years in which the jute manufacturing industry had existed in India not a single Native had been found competent to take charge of jute works. Millowners would be glad to employ Native supervisors if qualified men could be found.

The Calcutta Health Society, a body founded three years ago, has again earned public gratitude by publishing a thoughtful essay on the sanitary condition of Calcutta. It points out that during the last six years cholera alone has claimed 21,000 victims in the city and its suburbs, and that this result is directly traceable to the filthy condition of certain plague spots, to defects in the drainage system, to the want of proper control over the milk supply, and to the deficiency of the water supply in parts of the town and throughout the suburbs. It also draws attention to the enormous infant mortality which was mainly due to the ignorant and superstitious practices of the Native lying-in-room. Various other dangers to the public health are discussed at length. A meeting called under the auspices of the society was held on Wednesday, the Lieutenant-Governor presiding. He and several other leading citizens addressed the assembly. The Lieutenant-Governor said that while something had been done much yet remained to be done, and he urged the Municipality to spare no effort to remove the causes which rendered Calcutta the home of cholera and a standing menace to the health of the world.

It is hoped that the Viceroy will, during his visit to Behar, open the railway bridge over the Gunduch, thus completing the railway connection between Tirhoot and the North-West Provinces.

At a meeting of the Legislative Council on Friday Sir T. Hope moved for leave to introduce the Scinde-Pishin Railway Bill. He said that the difficulties in the construction of the line were so great that if very strict regard were paid to the protection of the public the Government might hesitate to throw open portions of it for some time, but if the opening were postponed the people of Pishin and Quetta would suffer serious inconvenience and great loss. Therefore it was proposed to open the line, but meanwhile to extend to it only such portions of the Railway Act as were applicable in the circumstances, and to limit the liability of the Government for injury to persons and property carried by it. That was the object of the present Bill. The standing orders were then suspended, and the Bill was carried through all its stages and passed.

Some alarm has been caused in Nepal by reports concerning an alleged plot. It was stated that General Ranabir Jung, son of Jung Bahadur, who was a refugee in India, had assembled a large number of Nepalese on the British side of the frontier and was about to attack Khatmandoo. Ranabir has been arrested by the Indian police and imprisoned at Motiharri. He openly avowed his intention to fight for his rights; but it seems that his following was small, and that the reports which had alarmed the Khatmandoo Government were greatly exaggerated. Ranabir has now been taken to Patna and there released on the understanding that he is not to leave the city without informing a magistrate.

BURMA.

RANGOON, MARCH 6.

Sir C. Bernard left yesterday for Calcutta. The Rangoon Press, while bearing testimony to his high personal qualities and his zeal for the public service, severely condemns his career as an administrator, and dwells on the disorganised and unsatisfactory condition in which he has left Upper and Lower Burma.

Mr. Crosthwaite will leave on the 9th inst. for Mandalay, and on his way will meet the Commissioners and district officers of Upper Burma and confer with them. Mr. Crosthwaite will remain in Mandalay about six weeks, and will probably visit the Ruby Mines. Henceforward the Chief Commissioner will reside during a portion of the year at Mandalay.

A chief engineer has been appointed for Upper Burma, and Mr. Crosthwaite will carry out the policy of a liberal expenditure on public works, and especially roads, in Upper Burma. The civil staff will also be increased. One of the first questions which Mr. Crosthwaite will deal with is the settlement of claims against the Burmese Government.

Very important intelligence has been received to-day from Mr. Burgess. The Woontho Tsawbwa has submitted. He agrees to pay all the tribute demanded—30,000 rupees—and he has paid in the first instalment and delivered up some of the arms which he was required to hand over. This sudden change of attitude is due to the Tsawbwa's conviction that an attack in force on him would be no longer delayed. His submission is a most important step towards the pacification of Upper Burma. Mr. Burgess deserves much credit for the ability and tact which he has displayed in the negotiations with the Tsawbwa.

The Yau district is being rapidly reduced to order by General Low and Captain Eyre, Deputy-Commissioner of Pagan. Owing to the great exposure and hardships which Captain Eyre has undergone, he has had to apply for sick leave, and the Government will thus be temporarily deprived of the services of one of the ablest officers in the Burmese commission.

During the last few months 20,000 soldiers and followers and 10,000 baggage animals were transhipped at Rangoon for Upper Burma without a hitch. The Government of India and General Roberts have recognised the excellent services thus rendered, and have formally thanked General Gordon, commanding in Lower Burma, and Mr. Kennedy, C.I.E., manager of the Irrawaddy Flotilla Company. The zeal and ability displayed by Captain Saunders, R.A., Assistant Quartermaster-General in Rangoon, have been specially recognised by the Government and the Commander-in-Chief.

AFGHANISTAN.

CALCUTTA, MARCH 7.

Among the latest reports from Cabul is one stating that the Ameer is trying to disarm the Ghilzais and is raising Durani regiments in the Candahar province. He is said to have secured several more Ghilzais with the object of keeping the tribe under control. The impression seems to be general that the Ghilzais will rise again during this month. It is reported that besides the pamphlet describing his visit to India the Ameer has published another calling upon the people to prepare for a Jihad.

THE ADMINISTRATION OF BURMA.

(Times of India.)

THE retirement of Sir Charles Bernard from the Chief Commissionership of Upper and Lower Burma brings to an end an eventful chapter in the history of the country. The new Chief Commissioner, Mr. Crosthwaite, will have a weighty responsibility laid upon him, but he carries with him a reputation that almost ensures that the united Province will be administered with tact and skill. A great deal of energy is always shown by the officials of Burma. An instance of this occurs in the issue of the Administration Report with promptness that would be phenomenal on this side of the country, and would cause an official thus distinguishing himself to be regarded with suspicion by his fellows, seniors and juniors alike. Zeal has not yet become the downward path of perdition in Burma. The Administration Report deals with Lower Burma during the year 1885-86, and with Upper Burma during 1886. Notwithstanding the occurrence of war beyond the frontier and the menaces of dacoits within the frontier the administration of Lower Burma went on tranquilly. Only two Acts applying exclusively to Burma were passed by the Imperial Legislature, and these were of minor importance, the intention of one being to amend an error in the Municipal Act of 1884, and of the other to relieve the Recorder of Rangoon of a part of his work. A point deserving of notice is the failure of the Burmese police to cope with the difficulties presented them by a slumbering revolt in certain districts. Disturbances broke out and the Burmese police vanished before the storm. It was then seen how necessary a trustworthy police force was to the proper maintenance of order, and accordingly efforts have been made, and are being made, to raise levies in India. This is a subject to which we shall again refer when dealing with Upper Burma. Sanguation was felt by certain of the administrative departments, such as that of Civil Justice and Registration. Municipal administration made some progress. Under this heading must be taken the adoption by Rangoon of a scheme of drainage. The Forest Department made satisfactory progress, for there was a net revenue from its operations of £92,291, or nearly double the revenue of the previous year. A much less favourable report is given of the mining industries. The oil-mining industry of the Kyaikpyu district made no progress during the year. A concession was given to work a coal-field in the Thayetmyo district, but operations have not advanced very far. There are other coal-fields, such as that in Henzada lately reported on by Dr. Romanis, the Chemical Examiner, but the roads are still of such a rudimentary nature and the communications so difficult that some time must elapse before coal-mining is carried on to any considerable extent in Burma. The experimental farms and gardens have been continued—at Alon under the charge of the Chemical Examiner, and at Mergui and in the Arakan Hill tracts. The Assistant Director of Agriculture has paid much attention to the raising of tobacco after the American methods, and seems to have met with fair success.

An unmistakable sign of the prosperity of Burma is the continuous increase of its trade. The total sea-borne trade, excluding Government transactions, reached a total of almost £18,000,000 as against £16,000,000 the previous year. The export of rice is the chief trade of Burma, and this steadily increases. An important feature of the rice trade is that Rangoon has been able to do more than keep its position relatively to the ports of Saigon and Bangkok. In recent years the French have been making great exertions to push on their pet port of Saigon, and these exertions have been pretty successful. But to show how artificial was the stimulation the exports from Saigon greatly diminished, while those from Rangoon greatly increased during the past year. And the prosperity of Lower Burma is shown in another way. Though there has been considerable extra expense caused by the war the contribution from Imperial funds needed to balance accounts was £77,823. The finances of Burma are arranged by five years contract, dating from 1st April, 1882. The total revenue receipts amounted to £2,732,654. And the cost of the civil administration was £1,537,936. There was thus left a surplus available for Imperial purposes of £1,051,775. The surplus last year was £900,611, so that in spite of the exceptional circumstances of the past year the surplus has increased by £151,164 during the year; which is eminently satisfactory. Yet the financial pressure was such that only a small portion of the total revenue was devoted to expenditure on public works, and this expenditure was confined to the repairing of existing buildings and roads. During the year the Toungoo railway was completed, the last section of seventy-three miles being opened on the 1st July, 1885. The railway is now being extended to Mandalay, and must prove a most important means of opening up the country.

The most interesting, because the most novel, section of this valuable report is that which deals with Upper Burma. It deserves a much more extended notice than we can give at this time. The report commences with a geographical and historical description of the country, and then proceeds to give an account of the events which led to the downfall of the dynasty of Alompra. It is sad to read of the terrible misgovernment which Burma has suffered. Though there never has been a state of settled order, yet in recent times the lawlessness grew to frightful dimensions. With a very little care the disasters which overwhelmed the dynasty might have been avoided. Secluded in his palace the King knew nothing of what was going on around, and seemed to care as much. Certain intriguers pursued their unscrupulous way, and while they filled the ears of the King with flattery, they led him as well as themselves to ruin. Carried away with the idea that they could oppress British subjects with as much impunity as their own, and lulled in the fancied security that the British Government being pledged to respect the integrity of Native States would not interfere to stop the tyranny beyond the frontier, the Burmese Government proceeded to fine the Bombay-Burma Corporation. Then the limit of barbaric licence was reached, and the British Government was forced to stop the lawless career of the Burmese King. The annexation was not resolved on, as has been explained in the famous Minute of Lord Dufferin, until it was seen that there was no other course left. And the annexation of Burma being resolved on it was carried out with vigour. The country was cut up into districts, and civil officers were put in charge. But the calmness with which the Burmese regarded the coming of the British presently gave way to discontent. The pretenders found assistance from the dacoits, and the area of disaffection spread. The rebel bands terrorised over large districts, because the number of troops in Upper Burma was insufficient for the task given them. Then the second campaign was needed. And now that it has practically been brought to an end there is every reason to suppose that the pacification is complete. The rebel bands have been broken up. Most of the dacoit leaders have been killed or are captured. The two chief leaders, Boh Saway and Hla Oo, are in extremity, and the first named, indeed, is said to have been captured. So it is fitting that the troops should be recalled. Their place is to be taken by the police levies that are being raised throughout India. The conduct of the Burmese police has shown that they cannot be trusted in cases of emergency. The new levies are very large, yet little difficulty seems to be experienced in raising them. The Native troops in Burma are offered favourable terms on which to enter this police force, but many of them have been so long away from their homes that they show considerable reluctance to join. But the work of pacification seems almost complete, and it is fitting that Sir Charles Bernard, who has gone through with it in a most praiseworthy manner, should have his rest. It is to be regretted that his health has suffered, but we hope that his year's furlough will restore him to health. His successor, Mr. Crosthwaite, will have the less important work of keeping together the territory that has been won, and spreading abroad the blessings of civilised government among a people that have not known tranquillity.

THE JUBILEE—HOW IT STRIKES SOME PEOPLE.

(Pioneer.)

During the last few weeks a pertinent question has been going the round of the Vernacular Press, and if we may trust common report the same question is vexing the minds and puzzling the curiosity of many of our Native friends. It is known that the Queen this year has reigned fifty years, but why the year should be called a Jubilee is not obvious. What is this "Jubilee?" asked the grey-haired Hindu father of his young hopeful, who attends a Mission School and there imbibes a singular mixture of sacred and secular learning. Jubilee, replies the youth, was a year set apart in certain countries where the Christians live, for making everyone rich. In that year the mahajan made restoration to the poor man, the ryot got back what he had sold or mortgaged, and everyone had enough to eat. But that Jubilee was not this Jubilee, replies the puzzled father, for prices are very high, and the baniya has just foreclosed, and the Collector has sent round four subscription lists for Jubilee. "What is Jubilee?" is the question put in a small literary circle of Bengali clerks and writers which meets bi-weekly somewhere in Calcutta. The year of Jubilee, volunteers the member of the coterie last from college, is described by Gibbon as a recurring season instituted by a venal and impoverished Pope under the name of the Holy Year for the improvement of his finances. "It is true," continues the oracle, that the idea was borrowed from the Mosaic Law, which prescribed every fiftieth year the suspension of all care and labour, and the release of lands, debts, and servitude. But this in the great historian's opinion was only a theoretical edict of the priest—hood, like many of the prescriptions in our own antiquated books of Manu. 'I should be glad to learn,' wrote Gibbon, 'that this ruinous festival was observed by the Jewish people.' It appears to me, therefore, that the Government has adopted the Papal rather than the Jewish notion of a Jubilee, reconciling in it 'the vices of ambition and avarice,' and making it, by a prodigious swarm of subscriptions for purposes which might be met from ordinary revenues, 'a ruinous festival' to the people of India." To which oracular sentence the coterie unanimously assents.

The personages in the above dialogues may be fictitious, but the sentiment put into their mouths is very general among a considerable section of Native society. There never was a time in India in which more schemes for extracting money from Native, and, we may add, European pockets, were afloat, or in which more amateur tax-collectors in the guise of subscription-seekers waylaid an embarrassed public. First there is Lady Dufferin's Fund which has long held the field, and which seems to meet one at every turn with some new want or some new device for capturing contributions. Next there is in every district the mysterious "Jubilee" Fund, which to the unenlightened mind appears to be a scheme for making people pay for fireworks who have hitherto seen them for nothing, or for founding town halls, dispensaries, and waterworks which are ordinarily supposed to be provided from municipal taxation. Then a hat has been sent round by the Prince of Wales and the Indian Governments for subscriptions to the Imperial Institute, and Native chiefs and Native gentlemen who want to know how a permanent fancy-fair in London can possibly benefit them, receive a significant hint that "the Prince" wishes it, and are told that his mother has reigned fifty years and that she has set her heart on this building. There are other subscription projects already among us or in process of birth, but the above are enough to prove that the Indian public, which is by no means affluent, and which still bitterly resents the Income-tax, is seriously pestered by this novel supplement to direct taxation, and its natural feelings of loyalty disturbed by these inroads on its resources. Of the object of Lady Dufferin's Fund it is impossible to speak too highly, and it is unfortunate that its promoters should find themselves driven by the presence in the field of other competitors to the occasional use of unseemly forms of solicitation. Of the Prince of Wales's Fund it is difficult to speak within the bounds of courtesy. The Imperial Institute will not do an iota of good to India, it is not believed in even at home, and the attempt to make India pay for the indifference of the English public indicates a great deal of moral cowardice on the part of the India Office. The municipal and district "Jubilee" Funds, if confined strictly to voluntary subscribers, might be pronounced unobjectionable. But in India it is extremely difficult without pressure and active canvassing to get subscriptions for any object, and the "Jubilee" Funds form no exception to this rule. People are practically obliged to pay, whether they like or not, and the main distinction between a subscription and a direct tax is that the former falls the more heavily on the two on persons of small or moderate means and good social position. This is one very cogent reason for the comparative indifference of the Mahomedan gentry and middle classes to the Jubilee arrangements.

In view of these facts the Government would do well while there is yet time to consider in what sense it proposes to treat this year as a "Jubilee." Is the period to be one of rejoicing to the poor, or is it to recall the unpleasing traditions of Papal Jubilees? The term unfortunately has the twofold meaning, and it seems not improbable that our rulers with the best intentions in the world may add another synonym for extortion to the polyglot vocabulary of the Urdu tongue. The truth is, that in a matter like this our Government is too serious and too unsentimental to touch the real pulse of Native feeling. It considers that the people are so fully convinced of the unspeakable benefits which a far-off Sovereign has conferred upon them in a protracted reign as to be everywhere eager to tax themselves to commemorate her name by municipal and local works of practical and prosaic utility. But this is not the Oriental way of looking at the matter. Without question the people of India are extremely glad that Her Majesty has reigned so long, and believe that her intentions and wishes in respect of this remote realm are always gracious and sympathetic. But their idea is that the rejoicing and the effort should not be confined to them, but that the ruler also should play her part and disclose her affection towards her subjects in some signal manner. It is not forgotten that when Akbar had a son granted him, he filled the tank near the hermit's retreat with silver for the poor and hungry, and that his successors habitually celebrated great days by scattering pearls and rubies among the crowds of Delhi and Lahore. No petty chief would ever ask his people to rejoice with him without doing something for them in return. The idea that in this matter the obligations of ruler and subject are reciprocal is deeply rooted in Oriental thought, and our Government, as representing the Queen, would be well-advised not to wholly disregard it. Distribution of honours and release of prisoners or even grants-in-aid for fireworks and illuminations will not suffice. Something broader and more elemental is needed to bring home to the masses throughout the length and breadth of this great realm that the ruler rejoices with them and they with the ruler. It would be a memorable day in India of which it could be said that on it at least no subject of the Queen wanted food or drink or a warm blanket. Whether it is possible to quite realise this ideal is not for us to say, but we believe that if the Government would only accept it as a working principle and would heartily co-operate with all individual and local efforts based on this principle, the Queen's Jubilee would be a day of rejoicing to the poor and homeless, and the noble lady whom we wish to honour would become a living personage in all her graciousness and womanly charity to thousands who as yet are barely conscious of her existence.

THE PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION.

(Englishman.)

It has been stated that the Public Service Commission has carried away a strong impression, from certain of the evidence, that the District Judges might with advantage be entirely relieved of Civil jurisdiction. That section of the Civil Service has furnished remarkably few witnesses, and the evidence on the subject of their duties on the Civil side of their Courts comes mainly from two very opposite quarters. On the one side we have the light-hearted utterances of the dashing Non-Regulation Officer, who, in the good old "hang legality" spirit, declares that any "Deputy" would make a first-rate Judge. To the Panjab mind, judicial work is unworthy of the ability of the Covenanted Civilian. In strange contrast with this modest opinion, we find the views of the Home trained Barrister Judge, who bewails the inexperience of the Civilian, and, believing that there is nothing like leather, most naturally pronounces for the "trained lawyer" theory. In this absence of qualified and conflict of unqualified testimony, it may be as well that we should state what are the facts of the case, so far as these provinces are concerned, and why we should most strongly deprecate the change of system now suggested, as fraught with danger alike to the Government, the High Court, and the people.

Whatever may be the case among the turbulent inhabitants of the North-West frontier districts, few will deny that, in this long settled and peaceful portion of the Empire, by far the most important object of Government should be that of securing, by every guarantee in its power, a pure, regular, and efficient administration of justice. In respect of all matters not of a criminal nature, Government endeavours at present to discharge this most sacred of all duties by providing about three hundred Native Judges, known as Munsifs and Sub-Judges, and by stationing at the chief local centres throughout the country about thirty English Judges, drawn from the Covenanted Civil Service, whose chief function, in the Civil Department of their work, is that of a Supervising and Controlling Agency. As, however, these thirty Judges also discharge criminal duties, it may be roughly estimated that only about half their time is available for Civil work. Thus it may be said that we employ one English Judge to control twenty Natives. We are confident that very few persons with practical experience of the conditions of life in the Mufasal would regard this proportion as in excess of the requirements of the case. It must be remembered that to be efficient, control must, in this country, be local, and within measurable distance of its objective. An invisible and inaccessible authority, whether in Calcutta, Simla, or Downing-street, unless it operate through the medium of an accessible and visible Englishman, can exercise only a paper control. It may take effect in matters of Return and Report, but it is powerless to influence conduct. By depriving the Civilian District Judge, therefore, of their Civil jurisdiction, we should be leaving the entire Native judiciary absolutely without any effectual control whatever. Nothing more dangerous to the well-being of society in these provinces could have been suggested! It is, indeed, said by some that our Native judicial officers are so far beyond reproach, that we may be content to place the entire population of Bengal, both European and Native, at their absolute disposal. Now, we should, of course, be the first to admit that both in character and efficiency the Sub-Judges and Munsifs of to-day are vastly superior to their predecessors. But how long their superiority would be maintained, or, at any rate, be believed in, when from Buxar to Chittagong every fragment of English control had been swept away, is another matter altogether.

IMPORTANCE OF INDIAN HISTORY TO INDIA.

(Madras Mail.)

The refusal of the Mohammedan Associations to take part in the late "National" Congress at Calcutta was creditable to the good sense of those representatives of the fifty millions of our Mussulman fellow-subjects. We know not, indeed, how far their decision may have been affected by the sudden recrudescence of religious animosity which seems to have been broken out, in the North-West, between the professors of Islam and the ignorant fanatical portion of the Hindoo population, but, whatever may have been the undercurrent of their motives, dispassionate men of all creeds will commend their patriotism and moderation. This divergence of opinion may possibly make the Hindoos less anxious than some of them have lately pretended to be, to substitute Muslim for Christian supremacy in Hindostan. So far the momentary jealousy will have done no harm to either party, for neither are the Mohammedans in a condition to resume the government of the country in its altered circumstances, nor would the Hindoos have much reason to congratulate themselves on again being subjected to the practically irresponsible Viceroys and Governors of another faith. The Natives of India are, with few exceptions, lamentably ignorant of the history of their own country in what they choose to believe were "the good old times." It is a general illusion that there has been a gradual deterioration of human happiness since the "golden age" of fable. We hear people even in England sighing for the low prices and frequent holidays of three centuries ago, unmindful of the fact that apparent cheapness signified a real lack of the precious metals and consequent inability to buy comforts now deemed indispensable; while amusements were, for the most part, so coarse and brutal that nowadays they would give pleasure only to rowdies and drunkards. The obscurity that enshrouds the annals of Mussulman India would be largely dispelled if the study of India's history occupied a more prominent place in the curriculum of English-speaking schools and Colleges. It would certainly be more useful to the students in after-life than familiarity with Burke's speeches, or the ponderous phraseology of Dr. Johnson. Western principles and ideas might be advantageously illustrated by comparing them and their fruits with the character and results of Oriental modes of administration. Merely as a question of style, and as a means of acquiring modern English in its purest form, the works of Talboys Wheeler, of Mounstuart Elphinstone, of Dr. W. Hunter might be profitably commented in the lecture-room. It is absurd to require of Indian youths that they should be more familiar with the antecedents of European peoples than with their own. What would be thought of a German, French, or English teacher who should make the history and literature of his own country secondary to those of foreign nations? It is, of course, highly advisable to know the latter also, but the structure should be raised on a broad and solid foundation of acquaintance with the works and ways of one's own ancestors. If we mistake not, the Natives of India would be little disposed to change their present lot, with all its inconveniences, if they possessed a more minute and accurate knowledge of the grievous wrongs endured by the uninfluential and friendless classes in the palmy days of the Moghul dynasty.

SOME MAHOMEDAN GRIEVANCES IN SIND.

(Madras Mail.)

The ever-recurring question, how the Mahomedan interest in this country, comprising as it does some fifty-two millions of people, is to be adequately represented in the scheme of Government, general and local, was revived, during Lord Reay's recent tour in Sind, with all the force derivable from the fact that that Province is almost purely Mahomedan. The address of the Sind branch of the Central National Mahomedan Association to the Governor of Bombay, and his Excellency's reply, are very interesting. Commencing with expressions of their loyalty, and their gratitude for the material blessings of British Government, which those who have best studied the Mahomedans of India will believe to be sincere, the Association proceeded in a characteristically respectful manner to state some of the Mahomedan grievances of the Province. First and foremost comes the old story of "a great disparity in the distribution of official patronage." The natural desires and aspirations of the community are said to be checked, and their ardour for learning damped, because but few of their members are elevated in the public service. Lord Reay's answer was inevitable. It is not only in Sind, but everywhere in India, that disparity in the distribution of official patronage arises from the simple fact that the children of Islam still lag behind in the educational race. As Lord Reay pointed out, this very disparity should have the effect of stimulating, rather than of damping their ardour for learning. It is an undoubted fact that the educated Mahomedan has, in the desire of Government to encourage a loyal and naturally dominant race, a positive advantage in the struggle for employment. It is not too much to say that whenever in public offices, a choice lies between Mahomedan and other candidates, points are stretched in favour of the former which would never be countenanced in any other cases. Nothing is wanting, anywhere in India, to restore an even balance in the distribution of official patronage but an increase in the number of educated Mahomedans. The remedy lies in their own hands; and although the backwardness of their communities relieves the ruling power of the annoyances and impertinences, quite foreign to Mahomedan feeling, that are perpetrated by some representatives of other communities, yet, the risk of controversy, and of agitation would be welcomed, if it brought with it the yeoman's service of a race endowed with such sterling qualities as the Mahomedans of India. Steam is being got up but slowly, and until the educational engine gets regularly to work, but little improvement can be expected.

The same drawback applies to the next grievance of the Sind Mahomedans—the paucity of Musulman representations on Municipal boards. The proportion of representatives in such institutions cannot, obviously, be made to depend on the numerical strength of sections of the community, as the Association desires. In most civilized countries the weight of education and of property generally goes with the numerical majority; but in Sind the reverse is the case. The minority of Hindus has distanced the majority of Musulmans in education as well as in material prosperity. The remedy suggested by the Association is the removal of the property qualification, and the abolition of election by wards. Lord Reay's reply was mainly to the effect that sufficient experience of the new Act had not been gained to justify alterations, but he probably hit the real blot when he suggested that Mahomedan candidates for the Boards should bestir themselves to lay their claims in a proper manner before the electors. Providence helps those who help themselves, and the local submission which accepts British rule in India should not be allowed to run to supineness, or the semblance of supineness. The power reserved by the Act to the Government to nominate a certain proportion of the Municipal Councillors can always be, and generally is, exercised to rectify inequalities of representation; but it is their own education and energy alone which can ever solve the novel problem now presented in Sind of how to secure adequate representation to the majority.

The third and last of the grievances formulated by the Sind memorialists had reference to that thorniest subject which is the standing trouble everywhere—the land tenures. Tenures in Sind are peculiar, and the subject was approached from the Zemindar's point of view. Their tenants are represented as having them, so to speak, under their thumbs; and this result is attributed to the introduction of the British settlement, which was made direct with ryots, who did not take long to learn that the ryotwari system made them practically independent of their landlords. The tenants as a body are said to refuse to pay their Zemindari dues until they are dragged into court; and the remedy suggested is to confer on the Zemindars the same status as that conferred on "superior holders" by the Bombay Revenue Code (that is, the right to recover rent from inferior holders with the Collector's assistance), and to revert to the ancient system of collecting the revenue through the Chief Zemindar, as representative of the community. To these suggestions Lord Reay's reply was the guarded one, that the Sind Sabha—as the representative Association of the province—had been for two years considering a memorial on the Zemindari question, and that the Government could not deal with the subject till that memorial was received. In these days, when the tendency of all legislation on land questions is decidedly in favour of tenants' rights at the expense of landlords, it would be sanguine to hope that in Sind alone the sun should go back upon the dial for the resuscitation of a species of petty despotism among the Zemindars. The Bombay Government is, however, doing much to relieve Zemindars and landlords in Sind by the introduction of a much simpler form of settlement than that which now throws considerable expense upon them without adequate advantages. The scientific system of minute classification of soils is to be abandoned for a settlement by groups of villages, on the basis, chiefly, of charging for actual cultivation only. But to prevent the occupation of land without the intention of bona fide cultivation certain rules are framed, the chief of which make assessment payable in the first year whether the field taken up is cultivated or not; or in any year when profits by the sale of timber, grass, fodder, or other products of the field are realised; or in any year, if the field has not been cultivated for four consecutive years previous thereto. Lord Reay considers that these rules will meet all the objections against the present system; and in a province peculiarly dependent on the caprices of river inundation for cultivation, as Sind is, there is no question that a departure from the rigid system of a scientific settlement is necessary. Lord Reay's abandonment of his own belief in classification as the best guarantee against the over-assessment of poor soils may no doubt be attributed in great measure to the kindly feelings towards Mahomedans which are evident in his Kurrachee speech, and which are specially welcome when so much nonsense has, from time to time, been said and written about the attitude of the Indian Musulmans.

THE ANGLO-INDIAN.

(Indian Planter's Gazette.)

Civilians and Officers on the eve of retiring from India are not always quite decided as to the best place in which to settle down. There are so many considerations to be taken into account, there are so many conditions that are desirable, that it is no easy matter to decide where a man who has passed many years in India shall settle down and spend the afternoon and evening of his life surrounded with as many comforts and necessities as his means will admit. There is first of all the climate to be considered—it must not be a trying one with great extremes of heat and cold; nor must it be too relaxing. The place where the retired Anglo-Indian settles down must, if he is a family man, be able to provide a suitable education for his sons and daughters, and what is more important—a suitable career for his lads and homes and husband for his daughters when the time for marriage comes. There must be society more or less cultured; there must, in short, be as many of the best conditions of life to which he has been so long accustomed; with a good many more which India cannot give. A small income must be made to go a long way, and the style of living to which years of Indian exile has accustomed him must be continued in the new home where the retired civilian or officer proposes to pass the evening of his days. Where all these conditions are to be found—a temperate and equable climate; agreeable society; facilities for the education of children; economy in living; society more or less cultured and profitable, and agreeable occupation—each must decide for himself; but it is the number and variety of the conditions which the Anglo-Indian seeks to secure that render his search for a new home much of the nature of a pilgrimage after the Holy Grail, a search for a new El Dorado, the creation of a great Utopia and in some instances the fooling after a “Tom Tiddler’s Ground” as unsubstantial as a dream. Happy the Anglo-Indian whose quiver is not too full of those pledges of affection which ladies who love their lords, in ordinary circumstance, periodically present them. Happy is also the man who does not believe that after long years in India he can begin a new life in the backwoods of America, on the lonely sheep-pastures of Australia, in South Africa, in New Zealand, or in Tasmania; and happy also is he who does not believe that he has a genius for business, trade or speculation, for then he will never be tempted to invest capital in a patent cork for soda-water or in an attempt generally to extract sunbeams from cucumbers. Happiest of all is the man with a comfortable income from Government Three per Cents., able to live for the season in London should he feel disposed to do so, able to spend the English winter in Southern Europe or Northern Africa, able to send his lads and girls to the best public schools in England, and with a liver that admits of his taking an active part in all the duties which naturally fall to the part of a country gentleman. The men who can do the latter are certainly not abundant. What shall we say of managers and assistants of gardens and factories? What prospects have they, in these hard times, of spending the evening of life when the shadows are lengthening towards the East, surrounded by the scenes and faces they loved when they were young? They themselves can answer. In too many instances the sweet vision of an Indian career has been like the “early cloud and the morning dew that soon passeth away,” leaving behind the dry and arid desert of a parched existence, in exile, in toil and in little hope of anything but exile and toil till the great healer comes, and “poor so-and-so’s” place is taken by a fresh recruit in the struggle for existence in India.

ARCHDEACON ATLAY.

(Englishman.)

The departure of the Venerable Archdeacon Atlay from India for good will not only leave a blank which it will be difficult to fill in the diocese in which he has occupied a conspicuous position, but will be a source of regret to an unusually large circle of friends, extending far beyond the limits of the Cathedral parish with which he has been connected during by far the greater portion of his service in India. The Archdeacon, who is a younger brother of the present Bishop of Hereford, came out to India in the latter part of 1867 at the express invitation of Bishop Milman, who had been then first appointed to the diocese, and who had destined him for his domestic chaplain, a plan, however, which was not carried into execution. After officiating for a few weeks at Fort William he was posted to the Cathedral, where for fifteen years he has exercised a faithful ministry, broken only by two years’ furlough, and another two years when he officiated as chaplain of Naini Tal. The Archdeacon, who from the beginning has been a trusted adviser of both the late and present Bishop, came to India somewhat in advance of his time, as one of that school of High Churchmen who of late years have revived the Church of England and become a power in the nation, but who twenty years ago could hardly be said to possess a representative in this country. Possessed, however, of rare tact and discretion, and with broad sympathies for earnest workers of all shades of opinion, he soon gained, and has never since lost, the confidence of both clergy and laity, and when in 1883 the Bishop called him to the office of Archdeacon, in which he had previously officiated, the appointment met with hearty and universal approval.

Though naturally not so prominently before the public as his predecessor, Archdeacon Bay, whose efforts on behalf of European and East Indian education were so widely known and appreciated, Archdeacon Atlay’s influence has been strongly felt in other lines, and he takes no unworthy place in the roll of eminent men who have been Archdeacons of Calcutta. A scholarly, and at the same time a peculiarly earnest, preacher, his sermons were well adapted for a congregation such as that of the Cathedral, perhaps the most influential and intellectual gathering of its kind in India. The steady increase in the number of communicants marks, perhaps, the most important phase of the archdeacon’s influence, and, while his efforts have always been directed towards making the services of the Cathedral as worthy as possible of its position as the principal church in the province, most of the improvements also which have been effected within the fabric itself, and notably the magnificent reredos designed by Blomfield, are the result of his untiring energy. The Archdeacon will also be remembered as an energetic secretary of the Diocesan Board of Education, as one of the founders of the now flourishing Scott’s Lane Mission, in which he has always taken a deep interest, and as a liberal supporter of many works of charity and benevolence; while in society he was a bright and genial companion, with excellent conversational powers. The Archdeacon will be best remembered, as was said by a speaker at the recent Diocesan Conference, as one who has shared in the joys and sorrows of many families in this city during the past nineteen years, and as the true pattern of a Christian priest, whose advice and sympathy were never sought in vain.

BENGAL.

It is reported that the new structure over the Hooghly will be called the Jubilee Bridge.

It is practically settled that Captain A. Campbell, Indian Marine, is to succeed Captain Crew as Deputy Director of Marine at Kidderpore.

The governors of the Bruce Institution, Calcutta, at their last meeting elected 72 Eurasian girls to the benefit of the Trust. Of these 40 are Roman Catholics, 24 belong to the Church of England, and eight are Nonconformists.

Among the recent donors to the Bengal branch of the Countess of Dufferin’s Fund there are one life councillor, namely, Syud Looft Ali Khan, C.I.E., who has given the liberal sum of Rs. 5,000; and four life members, who have contributed Rs. 500 each, namely, Syud Mohamed Mehdi Hosseinkhan of Patua, Maharaja Girza Nath Roy of Dinagepur, the Maharanee of Dumraon, and Kumar Runajit Sinha, of Nashipur, Moorsadabad.

SIR E. BUCK returned to Calcutta on the 10th February from Madras. After leaving the Central Provinces he was deputed to confer with the Government of Madras on matters connected with the Survey and Settlement of the Presidency in pursuance of the proceedings of the Finance Committee. The assessment of the remaining districts of the province is likely to be completed within ten years.

THE Darjeeling News says:—“The Maharajah of Cooch Behar leaves India for England on the 8th of April next. The Maharajah has been a model absentee landlord since he came of age, and assumed the Government of the State after being in leading strings almost from his infancy. The wise administration of the State during the Maharajah’s minority, as carried out by Colonel Houghton, and after him by Lord Ulrick Browne, resulted in a very large surplus of revenue, and the people were contented. They now complain, from the highest to the lowest, that they are simply rack-rented for the benefit, not of the Maharajah, but of the numerous sponges of sorts who bleed the State vicariously.”

MADRAS.

H.H. THE MAHARAJAH OF MYSORE has subscribed Rs. 500 to the funds of the Bombay Institution for Deaf Mutes.

THE REV. BENJAMIN RICE, of the London Mission, died at Bangalore on the 9th ult., aged seventy-two. He was one of the oldest missionaries in Southern India, and celebrated the Jubilee of his missionary career only last month.

THE Madras Government has ratified the recent selection by the members of the Chamber of Commerce of Mr. Stewart R. Turnbull to be their chairman, by appointing him to the Legislative Council. The Hon. Mr. Turnbull (of Messrs. Wilson and Co.), the Madras Mail states, has been a prominent member of the Madras mercantile world for many years, and the dignity of a seat in the Council could not have been conferred on a more popular member of the non-official community. He is a son-in-law of Mr. J. R. Kindersley, late Judge of the High Court of Madras.

THE MAHARAJAH OF VIZIANAGRAM has made an offer to Government to contribute to the proposed Imperial Institute the articles sent by him as exhibits to the recent Colonial and Indian Exhibition. The articles thus offered consist of a silver-gilt ammar complete with canopy of Benares embroidery; a silver howdah (Native pattern), without canopy; a silver palanquin, gold-gilt; one set of elephant trappings with silver ornaments, complete; a lot of horse trappings in silver, complete; a collection of steel armour and weapons of war. The Maharajah’s liberal offer has been communicated, throughout the Government of India, to the Secretary of State, for the orders of his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales.

ALTHOUGH every publicity has been given to the arrangements made for the extension of the free passport system, there were no passports issued to pilgrims proceeding from the Madras Presidency to Arabia during the season ending 30th September last, except in the two districts of Malabar and Madras. The fact appears to be, the Madras Mail says, that owing to the general poverty of the Mahomedans of this presidency comparatively few can afford to undertake the pilgrimage to Mecca, and as nearly all of those who do go embark from Bombay, they generally find it more convenient to take out passports there. It is noted in Malabar that more than fifty per cent. of the issues were to pilgrims from the Ernad Taluk, which has always been one of the chief centres of Moplah fanaticism, thus showing that the objections to the new system, which were at first entertained by some of the Moplahs, are dying away.

Writing of the wreck of the B.I.S.N. Company's steamer Agra off Bimlipatam, a Ceylon paper says:—"The frequency of these wrecks suggests the thought that, perhaps, the late seismic disturbances in Java may have extended to the coasts of India and Ceylon, in which case the Admiralty at home should lose no time in ordering an immediate re-survey of these coasts. Indeed, a correspondent points out, that a gunboat left England with instructions to make a re-survey of certain coasts, but some doubts are now raised as to whether the boat is intended for the China or Ceylon stations. Should no action be taken, however, we think it time the local Government made a move in the matter, and not wait till the rocks become gradually known by the loss of valuable steamers, and perhaps at the cost of many lives and much treasure."

BOMBAY.

Mr. J. W. A. WEIR, C.S., has been appointed an Assistant Collector in Sind.

THE REV. J. F. FORBES, M.A., Bombay Ecclesiastical Establishment, has been granted by the Secretary of State for India a further extension of leave for six months on medical certificate.

Mr. E. T. CANDY, Acting Judicial Commissioner in Sind and Judge of the Sudder Court in that province, is allowed furlough for eight months from April 1.

ORDERS have been received by Messrs. B. and A. Homarjee from Italy to ship a large amount of silver in rupees to Aden, en route for Massowa.

THE REV. C. WALFORD, M.A., Bombay Ecclesiastical Establishment, whose leave expired on December 18, has been allowed by the Secretary of State for India to retire from the service.

THE yacht Sunbeam, belonging to the Right Hon. Lord Brassey, arrived in harbour on February 10 from Kurrachee, doing the entire distance in a little over fifty hours under sail, which is probably the fastest time on record. She left Kurrachee on February 8.

THE Bombay Season Reports shows that during the past week there was slight rain in the Kurrachee district. The reaping of rabi crops is going on in parts of six districts. The standing crops still suffer from blight and frost in some places. Fever prevails in parts of nine, cattle disease in parts of ten, and smallpox in parts of three districts.

NORTH-WEST PROVINCES, OUDH AND PUNJAB.

A DESPATCH from the Secretary of State on the "Exodus" question has reached the Government of India. The Allahabad paper says:—"There is nothing notable in it beyond an inquiry regarding Government's views on certain specified points. The question will be answered in a despatch now under preparation, which will be exhaustive."

THE first attempt to estimate the area and yield under cotton in the Punjab according to the plan laid down by the Government of India, was made in the year 1886, which renders comparison with the returns of former years impossible. Last year the total area was 1,089,300 acres, which is said to be higher than in the two previous years. The increase is chiefly in unirrigated lands, owing to the season being favourable. The estimate of the outturn is only approximate, but it shows that the total yield of ginned cotton to have been about 11,67,797 maunds.

THE case in which Mehr Ali, a leading member of the Mahomedan community at Hoshiarpore, was charged with abetting murder and dacoity during the Hoshiarpore riots, was brought to a close on the 5th ult., before the Sessions Judge at Hoshiarpore. The sentences passed were, under Section 302 and 109-114, death, to be followed by forfeiture of accused's property to the Crown under Section 62 Indian Penal Code, for abetment of rioting under Section 147-109, rigorous imprisonment for three years, and Rs. 2,500 fine for abetment of dacoity, Section 395, 109-114, rigorous imprisonment for five years, and Rs. 2,500 fine. The prisoner has appealed to the Chief Court.

A MODIFICATION has been ordered in the relief of troops under orders to return to India from Upper Burma. The Government have decided, on the score of economy, to use their own troopers as much as possible instead of taking up private vessels. Accordingly the troops will be gradually brought across the bay, and the trooping will thus probably last during March and April. Moreover, it has been found possible to utilise the troopship Jumna in the work, her place on the roster from Bombay to England being taken, on the 20th March, by the Euphrates. There is double gain in the new arrangement. Money will be saved and the troops will be withdrawn so gradually that the Burmans are not likely to imagine that any large diminution in the strength of the garrison has taken place. The last two or three weeks' news from Burma has shown that the guerilla warfare is by no means at an end, so the longer the garrison is kept at its present strength the greater chance have the Military authorities in hunting down such bands as still hold out among the jungle and forests.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

THE CRUISE OF THE MARCHESSA TO KAMSCHATKA AND NEW GUINEA.*

How little, how very little, is known as to Kamschatka. The general notion is, perhaps, that it is a land of dreary wastes and desolate steppes; yet in good truth there is much to admire. In the first place, Avatcha Bay is "one of the finest harbours in the world, if not actually the finest. Rio and Sydney have no mean claims for this position of honour; but those of us who had seen both were unanimous in awarding the palm to their Kamschatkan rival." Such is the testimony of Mr. Guillemard, and certainly if the picture which he has given of the Bay in question be trustworthy, it may well be imagined that the praise thus bestowed is not misplaced. Then, again, is there not much to occasion surprise in the multitude of fish which swarm in the rivers to a degree beyond the power of imagination to conceive! Fancy 20,000 salmon caught in one day! yet there is no reason to suppose that a "traveller's lie" accunts in some measure for such an extraordinary haul. The dogs are, perhaps, the most familiar sights in these regions; as regards the majority of readers who picture life in such cold localities as a never-ending succession of trips on sleighs drawn by quadrupeds trained to cross the snowy plains. But even here there is a considerable degree of ignorance as to facts; for, in place of the patient, docile creature of the story-book, the animals are surly, ill-conditioned, rapacious plunderers, dead to the gentler instincts which make the dog an universal favourite in our own land.

Lastly, there are the seals, "as the sand upon the sea shore for multitude," not by tens, twenties, or hundreds, but by thousands upon thousands—"a seething black mass of animal life." But the people!—fishy, odoriferous, dirty, uncouth, dishonest, and avaricious—let us leave them to "stew in their own juice," and betake ourselves to the warmer climes of New Guinea and the adjacent islands. What an interesting account Mr. Guillemard has penned in regard to these lovely and little-known portions of the universe, where nature seems to have exhausted the resources of colour and beauty in decking the birds of the air, which, glittering in the sun as they dart to and fro, almost bewilder the spectator with the richness of their plumage and the elegance of their shape, making amends by these attractions for the absence of song—a charm which is denied to these denizens of the tropics! The climate is, as a rule, apparently none to good, yet persons attain considerable ages; and one instance is given of a ruling potentate, who married a young maiden when he had attained the ripe and mellow age of ninety-eight! Small-pox is a dreadful scourge; and some passages avert this disease—free-trade in which has more than decimated entire districts—might with advantage be perused by those fanatics who wish their neighbours to run the risk of being afflicted with this loathsome malady in order that there may not be any "interference with the liberty of the subject."

It would be easy to fill page after page with details in regard to the various spots at which the Marchessa dropped anchor, but the laws of "space" are inexorable. Let us, therefore, in taking leave of Mr. Guillemard, tender him our warmest thanks for the graphic and evidently unvarnished account which he has presented to the public of his journeys in remote regions, of which the virgin soil has as yet been free from the desecrating step of the "globe-trotter." A word, too, of praise to Mr. Kettlewell, the owner of the yacht Marchessa, whose enterprise prompted him to visit out-of-the-way islands, and extend the knowledge of spots where European footsteps have not as yet left the impress of civilisation. Nor should the artist, whose labours lend such a charm to a charming work, be omitted from the catalogue of thanks. Seldom has Mr. Murray issued a more attractive book of travels, or a more readable account of wanderings in the bye-paths of the great Universe.

THE ARABIAN NIGHTS.†

On reading the first volume of "Lady Burton's Edition of the Arabian Nights," again and again the reflection occurred how little—how very little—the general public know as to the tales of which the name is familiar in every circle of society. Still more does this fact force itself into notice in the second volume. Not a story do we meet which bears a name linked with the memories of youth or the recollections of early age. What is the explanation? Are all the tales, which for generation after generation have played their part in the nursery, merely idle dreams of a fanciful edition of the "Thousand and One Nights?" or are the well-known stories reserved for the last? We cannot say; but we avow with some trepidation that we have not hitherto met with a single friendly face amongst the two hundred and fifty divisions as yet presented to the public.

If, however, we have expected against expectation for some landmark to show us the road whereon we are travelling, it must, notwithstanding, be avowed that in the present continuation of the tales there is much to interest, and, perhaps, more to instruct. Of course, as in the opening stories, the peridy of women is the groundwork and basis of a vast array of adventures and misfortunes; for wherever a lady appears she leaves on the ocean of life a broad wake of misery and ruin—to such an extent that at times the reader wearies of discovering again and again that if there were no mothers, no wives, no daughters, no sisters, there would be no sin in the world. Well, of course not; for where would the world be? Apart from this, there is such a vast array of wisdom contained in this storehouse of experience and knowledge that the world should be wiser, and, therefore, happier in learning what dangers to avoid, what virtues to cultivate, what vices to eradicate. Then, too, as regards the Notes by Sir Richard Burton. It would be impossible to exaggerate their worth, their depth, or the insight that they afford into the inner life of the Arabian Natives, a life of which so little is known, though so much is talked—a life which has much to recommend it, albeit Exeter Hall is loud in its dispraise, and the advocates of Women's Rights are passionate in denunciation thereof. Like all other nations the people of the East have their faults, but who are they which presume to cast the first stone? So we gladly welcome this further instalment of Eastern lore, with an expression of thanks that Lady Burton has enabled our daughters to enjoy what, save for her labours, would have been a closed book for those who have cheeks to blush, feelings to suffer, or modesty to shame.

Since the above was written we have received Vol. III. of this series, and find at last the familiar face of Sindbad the Sailor. So evidently the bonne bouche are reserved for later in the day.

THE DEPRECIATION OF THE RUPEE.*

It needs no argument to prove that the depreciation of the rupee presses with extreme severity upon the Anglo-Indian community in the East. Few persons, too, will question the wisdom of paying the servants of the Crown such salaries as will enable them to live in an atmosphere free from the taint of corruption. Thus far Colonel Hughes Hallett, whose efforts to draw public attention to the dangers of the situation merit warm approval, is on safe ground; but his remedy is open to doubt. Were Government to fix the value of the rupee at 1s. 9d., this arbitrary enhancement of exchange could, of course, only be adopted as regards remittances drawn in the India Office Treasury, and the rupee would still remain at its fluctuating value in so far as concerns European goods purchased in India by the English community. In brief, the gallant Colonel's proposal is merely to raise the salaries of Government servants to the extent of 12½ per cent. Obviously such a plan possesses the drawback that, in exact proportion as the Government revenue is affected adversely by exchange, so are further demands made upon the public Exchequer. We cordially sympathise with the trials and troubles of our employés in India, but we do not think the case so hopeless that the brains of the world cannot do something to strike at the root of the disease. If nothing can be devised Colonel Hallett's proposal would doubtless come to the front, and force itself into notice.

NOTES ON SOUTH AFRICAN HUNTING.†

Captain Bethell's brochure on South African hunting is entitled to warm commendation; it is simple, concise, and bears the impress of accuracy. Travellers about to "globe-trot" in those regions would do well to peruse its pages, and many a pitfall will be avoided if they only attend to his directions and listen to his advice. Of course, experience must be bought, but it is always well to leave as little as possible to be purchased, even regarded from the standpoint of "interest." A half-hour might be spent worse than in company with the gallant Captain, who narrates personal experiences in a chatty, pleasant and attractive fashion.

The Century Magazine for March is, as usual, good and interesting. This month a series of articles has commenced, illustrative of the Cathedral Churches of England, which bids fair to be particularly attractive.

In the Illustrated Naval and Military Magazine (W. H. Allen and Co.) Major-General Mitford continues with graceful pen and graphic pencil his interesting notes of his journey from Lahore to Liverpool, via China, Japan, and America—letterpress and sketches of the scenery being both excellent. Admiral Winnington-Ingram contributes a paper, also illustrated, on Demerara and the Essequibo, and Dr. Dickinson continues his interesting series of our Military Stations in India, Allahabad being the one selected for notice in the present number. The articles on the Manser Repeating rifle and the Krnka and Sederl Magazine rifle give full descriptions, with blocks explanatory of the merits claimed for each weapon. A paper which is certain to attract attention is one by Captain Gull, late 5th Fusiliers, which deals ably and boldly with the vexed question of Volunteer organisation. Major Elliott has produced an excellent March number altogether, but we continue to miss his Victoria Cross records, and his pungent criticisms on Departmental shortcomings.

The Army and Navy Magazine (W. H. Allen and Co.) for the present month keeps up its good name as a Service Review of use and interest to its class readers. The sketch of the early career of the late Lord Strathnairn, which has been founded on information supplied by his friend and very popular A.D.C., Sir Owen Tudor Burne, will be acceptable to all who hold in honour the memory of the gallant Sir Hugh Rose. A short but incisive paper on the Education of Naval Officers contains some excellent suggestions for the future benefit of the Royal Navy, for they are practical and to the point. A Memoir of Major General Joseph Gorbham is a well-told story of an almost forgotten hero; and Mr. Charles Marvin contributes a paper upon another hero in his way—whom he designates "The Skobelev of India"—the late Sir Charles MacGregor. Now, without for a moment intending to detract from anything which has been said in praise of that distinguished officer, we think that the contrast between him and Sir Peter Lumsden as drawn by Mr. Marvin to the disparagement of the latter is hardly generous or just. It may be quite true that had Sir Charles MacGregor been sent to the Afghan Frontier instead of Sir Peter Lumsden he would have "gone for" the Russians, i.e., he would have brought about a war between that nation and England. But that is just what England wished to avoid, and which Sir Peter Lumsden wisely avoided. Palmarum qui meruit ferat.

TRAFFIC ROUTES TO THE EAST.—On Friday night, before a meeting of the Indian section of the Society of Arts, Major-General Sir F. J. Goldsmid read a paper on traffic routes in the East. The chair was occupied by Sir Juland Danvers. In the course of his lecture Sir F. Goldsmid said that he intended to consider that evening our traffic routes to India. Two routes were selected for examination, that by Egypt and the Red Sea, and that by Syria and the Persian Gulf. By restricting inquiry to the routes named he was not supposing that any of his hearers would seriously regard the voyage round the Cape as affording a fitting provision for England's traffic with India. He wished to dwell upon the vast importance of the Suez Canal—that world's thoroughfare—to our own country, and upon the vital urgency of incurring no risk of letting it slip from our hands amid the possible contingencies of war or hostile combinations. With the prestige of British soldiers in Egypt, however, there was no saying what might be the future history of the Suez Canal. Supposing that we had to make as rapidly as was possible an alternative line to that across Egypt, he would recommend simultaneous work westward from Karachi along the Makran coast to Jashk, distance roughly 700 miles, and eastward from a starting point near Cyprus to Kuwait, at the head of the Persian Gulf, distance about 850 miles. There would then remain 600 miles or so connected by steamer from the last named point to Jashk. The whole distance would be about 2,150 miles to be accomplished by rail and steamer in some six days and a half. This project, if carried out, might serve for an emergency, but could not be wholly satisfactory, and would possibly be inconvenient if the Egyptian route were not available. Looked upon as a preliminary to a great land line from the shores of the Mediterranean to India, it would, however, run a fair chance of favourable acceptance. If ever constructed, the so-called preliminary line would be diverted at some carefully selected point so as to enter as a main line the south-western district of Persia and find its way to Shiraz. If not constructed, the above line would represent a permanent line entering directly into Persia, without seeking the shores of the Gulf at all. He did not say that a complete Cyprus-Karachi line such as that sketched out would not admit of many modifications on the survey and construction, especially in the more westerly and the west central sections. But he believed that the engineering difficulties were not insurmountable, and that the eventful success of the railway as a source of revenue was certain; while, as to security, the political and commercial advantages of establishing a second route would at any time be considerable, and might under possible circumstances be exceedingly great, and it would be worth the while of the English Government to make an effort to secure them, considering the moderate pecuniary risk they would incur. What he would now wish was that attention should be given to the proposal in its entirety, believing, as he did, that its execution would be found not only practicable but highly desirable.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

ANGLO-INDIAN OFFICIALS AND THE RUPEE.

COLONEL HUGHES-HALLETT has come forward on behalf of the Anglo-Indian Official in the hope that the British Parliament or public will do something to redress the wrongs from which the Anglo-Indian servant of the State is suffering owing to the depreciation of the Rupee. The honourable member for Rochester, in a pamphlet just issued from the Press, states that in the Session before last he had placed upon the Notice Paper of the House of Commons a Motion in which he intended to have dealt concisely with such wrongs, but the Motion had to be postponed in consequence of the Debate on the Irish Government Bill, which took precedence of everything else, while the subsequent appointment of the Royal Commission upon the Gold and Silver Currency Question, which embraces the question of the depreciation of the Rupee, rendered the Motion presumably unnecessary. But the Colonel thinks that good may come by placing before the Commission and the public generally a simple and exact statement of the case as it affects the Anglo-Indian official. Hence the publication of his pamphlet. Commencing with the statement that he is not an Anglo-Indian himself, and "by no stretch of imagination can be considered as personally interested in this question," he proceeds to describe the Anglo-Indian official at home in terms which will hardly be considered by that official as over-flattering. He declares that the prejudice against the class is so strong in England that it is very difficult to obtain for them and for their woes a dispassionate hearing. "The fact is," he says, "and I am bound to admit it—Anglo-Indians do not show to advantage when at home on pension. As a rule you see them idle, and you resent the idea that a man should be drawing a salary for apparently doing nothing." But does not the same remark apply to all State pensioners? Surely all, save the Anglo-Indians, do not insist upon doing "something" in order to justify their receipt of pension? In the eventide of life, after retirement from official labour, the labourer is entitled to take rest without incurring the odium of the taxpayer's grumbling? The writer certainly explains, but in a half apologetic way, that the Anglo-Indian pensioner is, in reality, only drawing "deferred pay" or simply receiving back a portion of his wages which had been judiciously kept back by the State, so that when out of harness he might not starve, and that he only enjoys this deferred pay by virtue of having survived the disagreeables and the dangers of a tropical existence. But there is another side to the picture:—

Sometimes, however, you see the retired Anglo-Indian at work, and then also he does not show to advantage, because work in an old country like England, and work in a younger country like India, are two such very different things. In England it is the specialist who succeeds. The machine of civilisation is highly perfected—too highly perfected, perhaps—and each man only performs one particular duty within narrow bounds. In India civilisation (from the Anglo-Indian point of view) is in its infancy, and the successful man in India is he who can turn his hand to everything.

As a proof that the Anglo-Indian cannot in any given province of work at home compete with his English brother, and must, therefore, be considered a failure, a particular example is quoted, that of "a man like Sir R—— T——," who is described as follows:—
